Yow releases players from basketball team

Honeycutt, Williams no longer Lady Cats

DAVID SVOBODA

Sports Editor

The troubled Lady Cat basketball program was sent reeling again Monday with the announcement by Coach Susan Yow that three returning players were being released from the team.

The three players are sophomore forward Leah Honeycutt, junior guard Mary Jo Miller and sophomore center Polly Williams.

A release issued by the K-State Sports Information office Monday afternoon said the opportunity exists for the players to be reinstated, and by late Monday, Miller said she had been returned to the squad.

"As of now, philosophical differences exist between the coaching staff and the group of players," Yow said in the release. "We feel this is the best way to handle the situation at the present time.'

The announcement is the latest in a series of controversial events that have surrounded the program for the last two seasons.

The trail began in December 1989 with the announcement by Athletic Director Steve Miller that then-coach Matilda Mossman was resigning younger girls feel, that we've just with the season barely underway.

Interim coach Gaye Griffin, who was popular with the players, was passed over in the search for a new coach in favor of Yow, and events quieted until late in the 1990-91 campaign.

It was then Yow openly criticized her team in print, questioning its desire and flatly stating the Lady Cats would not win the Big Eight Women's Postseason Tournament. She later softened somewhat in that stance.

Prior to the tourney, senior forward Sheila Cherry left the squad, and reports varied as to whether she was removed from the roster by Yow or left on her own volition.

Monday's announcement was the culmination of events regarding the three players that began March 5, just two days after completion of the Big Eight tourney in Salina.

Mary Jo Miller and Williams refused to comment Monday night.

The events left Honeycutt and her father Steve, a standout on the K-State men's basketball squad 1966-69, stunned, hurt and bitter.

"In a sense I feel, and a lot of the were perceived as: a mess. Though the process of notification of possible action by Yow was said by the Honeycutts and another source close to the program to have begun on the aformentioned March 5, Leah Honeycutt said the handwriting may have been on the wall long been victims of what's happened in the past," Leah Honeycutt said. "Yow said she thought she inherited a mess, and I guess that's what we before that. "I think there were preconceived feelings before this year started," she said. "I think the attitudes were kind of carefully watched. That's where I feel that if the things from the past were going to be a part of the present, it should have been addressed from the start." Steve Honeycutt said Yow's actions throughout the year were puzzling, considering what has come to light of late — the knowledge that the head coach had openly discussed attitude problems of several of her best

Lady Cat Basketball shake-up

K-State women's basketball coach Susan Yow announced Monday morning that three returning players were released from the Lady Cat

The three — Leah Honeycutt, Mary Jo Miller and Polly Williams — were dismissed because of what Yow termed "philosophical differences." Miller, however, was reinstated late Monday afternoon, and Yow said the opportunity still exists for the other two players to be reinstated as well.

NCAA regulations stipulates that scholarship renewal decisions on student-athletes must be made by July 5, 1991. Yow said no decision has been made on scholarships for next season.

Problems plague KCT from start

Board of Regents looks for pending merger to increase enrollment in technical programs

LAJEAN RAU Staff Reporter

Kansas Board of Regents members look for the pending merger of Kansas College of Technology in Salina with K-State to solve some long-standing problems facing KCT.

Despite the quality of its programs and the school's high placement rate, several probigued KCT since its beginning in 1965.

Associate Director of Academic Affairs for the regents, John Welsh, cites three main problems. Primarily, KCT has not been able to enroll enough students.

"I think the merger is the best thing that could happen to Kansas Tech," said Jerry Cole, vice president for academic affairs at KCT. "Because frankly, we've had 25 years to prove that our programs are vital to the state, to convince students to come here, and we obviously haven't been that successful." KCT currently has 372 full-time students and about 750 total students. Another problem has been the programs in which KCT students are choosing to enroll.

"Getting sufficient numbers has been very critical, but they also haven't been able to enroll students in programs central to their misssion," Welsh said.

He said too many students were choosing to enroll in general education rather than technical programs.

They have a very focused mission. The technical programs are enrolled, don't get me wrong, but concentration on the general-ed students diverts the institution from its specific mission as a technical college."

Finally, Welsh said KCT has never really been cost-efficient. This inefficiency, specifically the unbalanced administrator-tostudent and administrator-to-faculty ratios, is part of what stimulated the merger, he said.

"This is a related problem," he said. "If KCT is going to be a free-standing institution, it needs to mirror other regents schools."

Presently KCT has a president and four vice presidents. Under the proposed merger, the school will have a dean and an associate dean, much like a college such as the College of Engineering at K-State.

In October 1989, the regents charged a task force with researching problems and making recommendations concerning the fate of

In May of the following year, the task force, headed by Regent Donald Slawson, chose the merger with K-State from several

The regents also addressed KCT's problems and made recommendations in 1978, 1985, 1986 and 1989, Welsh said.

"The studies were fairly thorough, but the suggestions made tended to be full of the flowery language common to higher educa-tion," he said. "They just weren't as practical as the recommendation to merge with K-

Welsh said the most significant difference affecting this task force was stronger support from the regents.

"A very strong, knowledgeable regent chaired the task force, and the board gave them the resources and the staff it needed," "This recommendation was based much more on data than on political rhetoric," he The merger and its funding plan have been approved by state legislative committees, and by the regents. Officials are waiting for the final go ahead from the House and Senate. Regents members and administrators from both schools said they hoped the Legislature would make its decision at least by mid-March, but are still holding out. "Had it happened by now, it would still have been difficult to have the dormitory done by fall 1991, which was the original plan," K-State President Jon Wefald said. But now it looks like things will be pushed back a full year." KCT, created by an act of the Legislature in 1965, was originally called Schilling Institute because it was developed on property formerly part of Salina's Schilling Air Force

KCT became the seventh of seven regents institutions in 1976.

MOSCOW - Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and his maverick rival Boris Yeltsin both emerged from the first referendum in Soviet history able to claim victory Monday.

Land use plan still unsettled

Although the Citizens Advisory Committee and Manhattan residents generally approved the Land Use Plan redraft, some concerns about specific areas were voiced at the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board meeting Monday night.

The CAC reported to the planning board after reviewing the redrafted plan on areas that had previously caused concern for the general public.

Colleen Roblyer, chairwoman of the board, said it was important the board understands the suggestions made in the CAC report and remains open to other modifications presented by the CAC or the public in the Connie Hamilton, spokeswoman for the CAC, said the items under land-use principles and criteria were too broad and needed to be related to the Manhattan area.

"This is Manhattan's plan, and the presented sub-plans should be the principle and criteria we use. It is just not written that way," Hamilton said.

The primary concern residents and the CAC had for the plan was the density zoning of certain areas in Manhattan, including the downtown and Aggieville areas.

Density levels have been an issue since the first draft was issued last year. Some Manhattan residents were concerned high-density zoned areas would increase traffic and make some areas dangerous.

Charles Stroh, Manhattan resident, said heavy traffic is increasing from the high school to Aggieville during the lunch hour down Fairchild Avenue and Laramie Street.

"Those two streets, which were never intended for that kind of traffic, now are serving as an access to Aggieville from that part of the city," he said.

Stroh said the intersections of 14th Street and Laramie, and 14th and Fairchild, have become confusing and dangerous.

"It has become a terrible situation," he said. "If you ever go down that street during the noon hour, watch the kind of jackrabbit kind of things that are going on because people can't see both ways. Any increase in density in this area is going to be absolutely

Anti-grumpiness resolution proposed

Dur.

OSLO, Norway (AP) - Mayor Arne Nilsen wants to make grumpiness illegal in his island community of Sund. Nilsen told an Oslo newspaper that he will propose a resolution at a township council meeting Tuesday requiring 5,000 Sund residents to be happy and think positive, while banning crankiness. "Unless the other council members are in a bad mood, I expect a majority in favor," Nilsen said to the Dagbladet newspaper. Sund residents are not abnormally gloomy but get caught up in negative and sad things, rather than seeing all there is to be happy about. Nilsen is trying to do something about it, he said.

Irascible islanders will not be prosecuted. But Nilsen said the lighthearted edict might jolt them into better spirits. The proposal exempts sulkers with good cause, such as the brokenhearted, the report said.

Finney signs interstate banking bill

TOPEKA (AP) - A series of efforts to modernize state banks throughout the past three decades reached a pinnacle Monday when Gov. Joan Finney signed into law a bill that allows limited interstate banking.

The new law will allow banks in Iowa, Missouri, Colorado, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska to buy Kansas banks if there are reciprocal agreements with those states, starting July 1, 1992.

This statute requires holding companies to demonstrate a clear and aggressive record of reinvesting in their local communities before they can acquire more banks across state lines," Finney said.

County drug informant shot, killed

PITTSBURG (AP) - A man who was shot, weighted with chains and a cinder block and thrown alive into a strip mine pit was a drug informant for the Crawford County sheriff's department, authorities confirmed Monday.

Sheriff Linn Fields would not provide further details during a news conference, saying it might endanger other informants and law enforcement officers.

Steven Boyce, 34, of Parsons, was killed last week in a drug deal authorities said went sour.

NICOSIA, Cyprus - Kurdish rebels said Monday the Iraqi army was using virtually every weapon it has to try to break the back of the rebellion in northern Iraq. Spokesmen for Shiite Muslims also fighting to topple President Saddam Hussein maintain their fighters are holding off a threepronged assault by Iraqi troops on the southern cities of Basra, Karbala and Tannuma.

newspapers claimed the army crushed the revolt in the south, despite attacks from Shiite rebels that had left cities in ruins. Kuwait's Crown Prince disputed that, saying Iraqi resistence was winning in the north as well as in southern Iraq

In return, he said veterinarians will run their practices more efficiently.

"If a practice is well-managed, then the health care that is delivered is much better," he said.

Another function planned for the center is a continuing education program for practitioners which will also allow students from other veterinary colleges to study at the center for extended periods of time. Lorenz said a research and deve-

Manhattan garden plots available to low-income families, students

HOPE SWARTZ

Collegian Reporter

For gardeners wishing to exercise their green thumbs, UFM has 150 garden plots for rent in south Manhattan at 9th and Riley.

Evelyn Campbell, UFM staff member, said although anyone can rent a plot, preference is given to low-income households, which account for 67 percent of gardeners.

"If I had two spaces left and one family was low-income, I would give them priority," Campbell said. "I'd like to see that happen, but we've never been that full. Last year, 145 plots were rented, which is about as full as we've ever been."

K-State students are prime candidates for the plots because their income usually falls under $8,500, Campbell said. People in that income bracket can rent a plot for $20 a season. Usually 35 percent of the gardeners are students.

A standard-sized plot, which is 400 square feet, requires three to four hours of work a week. Rental includes water and starter seeds. Campbell said she worked three plots last year and raised enough to can 139 quarts of vegetables and feed her family during harvest.

The soil at the site is sandy loam, which she said puts out a good crop.

The community garden also has specialized sections. One of the largest sections is set aside for gardeners who use only organic fertilizers and pesticides. Disabled and senior citizens can use plots raised two to three feet for easier access. Also available are free smaller plots for children from age 5 to 12.

One Manhattan resident, Melvin Starnes, has been gardening since 1975, when the project started.

"Before I retired from the Jefferson plant, I'd go down every day. Now, I make weeds my business," Starnes said. "A lot of my friends grow down here, and if one of them gets sick or goes on vacation, I help. I raise enough that I can give it away to people who need it.

Starnes said he plants early peas, potatoes and onions now, which are ready for harvest in June, then he can plant beans for fall so he can be out in the garden until frost.

Date rape sometimes stereotypes all men

fter being ignored for the greater part of the 20th century, the subject of date rape has recently come to the forefront of the media's attention. Larry King did a program on it. The situation at Brown University was splashed on headlines all across the country, and even People magazine did a cover story on it after deciding to give Chuck and Dia rest for at least one

Thus, it really came as no great suprise to me when I happened across a show on the Lifetime Cable Network titled "Against Her Will." As implied by the title, the show was about date rape.

I should probably mention the Lifetime Network (channel 24 in Manhattan) is primarily directed toward a female audience. I was never quite sure what that "female" audience was. I watched the channel quite often and to be completely honest, enjoyed it.

At least until the other night. After about five minutes of watching the program on date rape, I found myself very upset with people on my TV screen. The program was basically nothing more than an attack on the male species as a whole. Sadly to say, the truth wasn't allowed to interfere.

The propaganda parade began with a guideline to help women pick out those men who were most likely to commit the crime of date rape. One of their guidelines was that men who read magazines such as Playboy and Penthouse are "closet rapists."

The truth, however, is study after study has failed to prove any link between sexually oriented material and crime exists. I remember during the Reagan years when Ed Meese commissioned a group to do one such study. Expectations were that the report would be an indictment of men's magazines and show links between it and everything from rape to child pornography.

Needless to say, the administration was left wiping egg off its chin when the handpicked commission basically wiped out the expectations. The bottom line was a link was not found.

So it's kind of scary to find the people associated with "Against Her Will" making conclusions others have found to be untrue. People will believe anything you tell them. Unfortunately, "Against Her Will" takes advantage of this.

Even more scary to me than the lies and half-truths, were the portrayals of the men who were actually on the show. Basically, men were made to look like complete idiots.

The highlights of the show - for me were the interviews conducted with men. The producers managed to find some men who would fit into their little propaganda parade. The interviews primarily revolved around these men and how they decided when it was OK to commit date rape.

Are there men who think this way? You bet. Is it important to show their asinine beliefs for what they are? Very.

But show some of the positive things we do, too. Men take part in anti-rape rallies. I've seen them. Men provide escorts on college campuses to make sure women get home safely. Where was that portrayal?

As I think about it, I realize the saddest part of "Against Her Will" was that good information was buried underneath all of the antimale crap. I learned more college women have been date raped than are left-handed. I saw the problems of dealing with the police and administration when their idea of solving the problem is pretending like it doesn't exist.

But unfortunately, I was so pissed about the way men were portrayed throughout the show, the information didn't register with me. That's pretty sad. Because I could participate in "Take back the Night" marches. I could yell at administration and police officials until they develop some kind of plan to handle date rape situations when they arise.

Unfortunately, according to the producers of "Against Her Will," I'm either too stupid, too busy reading Playboy or thinking about raping someone.

Who's to blame for this situation? My species has to take some of the blame. For years we ignored it or didn't take it seriously. My father, who lived in an athletic dormitory at the University of Oklahoma in the early 1960s, said there were problems then. Then however, rape wasn't something "nice peo-

Some of that continues to this day. Despite the mass media's blitzkrieg of stories on it, most rapes go unreported. I can't and won't pretend to understand what it's like to be raped. I can't understand the pain and suffering of those who do report it and see nothing happen. I can, however, see the anger that results from it.

But my plea is to direct the anger to those who deserve it, not to the whole of the male species. I know date rape is wrong. I know I o help me. Give me information that's true. Don't make unfair stereotypes. When I ask stupid questions, answer them for me.

Above all else, listen to what I say and judge it on its own merits. Not on whether I'm a male, what I choose to read or what I look

Then, and only then, will the problem of date rape begin to end. I, and an awful lot of people who "Against Her Will" trashed on, want it to end. Just treat us like we do.

Initiative and referendum

Proposal of grassroots bill both expensive, defeative

One of Gov. Joan Finney's first proposals since taking office is a plan of initiative and referendum.

What this confusing concept means is the people of Kansas may be able to initiate a statute, a constitutional amendment or referendum to be voted on by the people on a generalelection ballot.

For example, if you felt the State of Kansas should have a state fish - and it should be the mudsucker - you could petition your friends and neighbors. If you had enough valid signatures, your proposed statute would be reviewed and put on a general-election ballot.

So when election time rolls around, the citizens of Kansas will elect their respective representatives in Washington, Topeka, county and city. Additionally, they would all vote on your bid for the mudsucker as the state fish.

This system seems swell and wonderful and puts the power of politics into the hands of the people.

Grassroots politics is a wonderful theory, but what do we do with the representatives in Topeka, who we pay to make all those decisions?

The policy of initiative and referendum would bog down government and take money away from other projects. The debate for approving such a policy would waste precious time and dollars. Committees and review boards would have to be set up to investigate and control the referendums and statutes which would flood the legislature.

General opinion seems to be against the proposal, citing the function of the existing political system and poor voter turnout for general elections.

When an existing political system works and high voter turnout seems unlikely, it doesn't make sense for the Legislature to waste time and money debating such an issue.

Tall tales often spring from break

t's that season again. Time for the rehashing of the past week, the adventures and the mishaps. It's time for "Spring Break Tall Tales" or "Creative Storytelling 101," a required course for all K-State students.

Surely you know what I mean. We all do it. After all, it would be the ultimate humiliation to admit someone else might have had more fun on spring break than you did. Of course, you can't tell how much fun anyone had, because no one is telling the truth anyway.

To survive this season, you have to know two things. The first is how to invent your very own creative spring break story. This talent isn't really emphasized enough in English Composition I and II, so I feel obligated to offer a crash course in spring break fantasizing right here.

First, an example. This is the story of a young man from the University of Kansas I observed on my own spring break trip, as he will no doubt tell it to his friends when he hits the bars in Lawrence. 'Oh, man, did we ever have an awesome time. The first night we hit all the bars in Dillon. Man, were we wasted! Then we met these girls who worked in Keystone and they took us to some party - oh, man, were they hot. It was so wild. So anyway, the next day we hit the slopes. We started doing double diamonds right off. I took this one jump and I was flying, must have caught two feet of air. It was an incredible wipe-out, I lost everything. One ski flew right over my head, the other was halfway up the hill - it was great. The whole trip was great. We had a blast.'

This guy would have gone on to tell about other spectacular falls and nights on the town, but his buddies were waiting to tell their own wild stories.

Now for the translation. Our hero spent the first night drinking shots in the hotel bar, where there were at least 10 men for every woman. He and his five friends talked to one girl among them all night, and she wouldn't give them any cigarettes.

He threw up twice. He woke up with a hangover and only managed to ski a few runs. He fell on a green slope while trying to tuck because he had crossed his skis. He spent the rest of the day in the lodge drinking overpriced hot chocolate and moaning to himself. You can't tell that to your friends at home. This is why the little white lie was invented.

So say your spring break didn't quite live up to your expectations. Whose really does? You have two options: You can hibernate until your friends stop talking about their own spring breaks, or you can come up with a story of your own. All it takes is a little imagination and a little multiplication.

Let's say you took one of the two basic spring breaks. Multiply the time you spent on the beach/slopes by two. Divide the size of your accomodations by two. (To be really cool at Padre or Daytona you have to have had at least 10 people in a room.)

Multiply your sunburn/tan by using various tanning products or beds. Now add the number of hours you traveled to the number of hours it felt like you traveled and use that figure to describe any major cross-country treks you may have taken. This gives you the basic bones of your story.

To really keep your audience enthralled this is tough, because spring break stories are rarely interesting to anyone except the person who is telling them — you need some really good, specific stuff. If you didn't really try surfing/parasailing/snowboarding/skiing double diamond black bowls, you should have, and you're going to have to pretend you

The only acceptable alternative is for a first-time skier, who is allowed to experience incredible wipeouts on the bunny hill only if it either knocked down an entire class of gorgeous members of the opposite sex or caused the stopping of the entire ski lift.

If this doesn't apply to you, then it is time to start multiplying again. Did you go around a tree while skiing? Great, you went treebashing. Did you see a dead marine animal? Then you were stung/bitten by something while sknorkeling. Yeah, that's the ticket.

OK, we've got the general idea. Now for the final element of the story: the nightlife. Multiply the amount of alcohol you consumed, particularly if a cute guy/girl bought it for you, by whatever you feel is appropriate.

If you want to look like an alcoholic, that's OK by me. If you didn't meet the person of your dreams or at the very least have a sexy somebody follow you around all night, it's time to start using the imagination. Just watch MTV for a while and pick out a wild reveler who suits your taste. Now tailor your story to your audience (let's face it, we all censor a little when we're in mixed company) and you're all set.

Now, to really handle yourself for the next few weeks, you have to not only be able to tell a great spring break story, you have to be able to decipher other people's stories. This may involve taking things with a whole bushel of

A good way to practice is to listen to the people who were actually with you on break tell their stories. That way, you know Lyn's great tan came out of a bottle because she fell asleep in the sun on the first day and all her skin came off.

You know Rick's experience on the black slope involved staring at it for 15 minutes and then rolling down it in 10. You know Daryl's girlfriend shut him out of the hotel room, and Ken struck out in every bar he went into. No matter what they say, you know the truth. That's power. But don't try any blackmail unless you're certain you're not living in a glass house yourself.

The basic trick here is, of course, division. Watch for words like awesome and incredible, phrases like "she wanted me," "major moguls" or "nobody could believe I really did it." If it sounds like something you'd see on television, then the teller probably already xaggeration is the word for the week. But it's fun. Half of the fun of spring break is looking forward to it and then telling about it. It's a rite of passage in and of itself.

What did I do on spring break? Well, maybe I went skiing and was offered a place on the Olympic team. Or maybe I went to Chicago and bought a new wardrobe. Then again, maybe I stayed home and had wild parties all week, or sat in the front row at the NCAA tournament game between UNLV and Georgetown. I haven't decided yet. Ask

Royals announce intent to release Bo

By the Associated Press

HAINES CITY, Fla. - Right now, not even Bo knows what's in his once brilliant future.

What Bo Jackson does know for sure is that he's no longer a member of the Kansas City Royals.

Jackson, one of the most recognized athletes in the world, was released by the Royals Monday after the team determined his footballrelated hip injury would not allow him to play baseball this year.

The Royals will ask waivers on Jackson Tuesday morning, and any team can claim him for $1 in the waiver period that ends 2 p.m. EST

"This action is taken with deep regret," Royals General Manager Herk Robinson said. "The entire Royals organization is deeply appreciative to Bo for his contributions to the club. We wish him and his family the very best of health and success."

Dr. Steve Joyce, the Royals' team physician, said Jackson has a fracture-dislocation of his left hip. The injury, sustained in the Los this.' Angeles Raiders' NFL playoff game Th Jan. 13, has resulted in cartilage damage in the hip socket.

Robinson said the Royals would pay one-sixth of the $2,375,000 contract Jackson agreed to in February. Jackson would have only made the full amount of his contract if he was on Kansas City's opening-day roster.

Under the basic, major league agreement, a player cannot be released because of injury, but the Royals consider this a football injury.

"Until I see the medical records in this case, I'm not prepared to say whether they can release him without paying him his full salary," said Eugene Orza, the associate general counsel of the players association.

"We felt this was the cleanest manner in which to handle this and was probably the most equitable to all involved," Robinson said in a news conference at the Royals' training complex.

'We've got about $2.5 million involved in a situation like this. Finances do enter into a situation like

The Royals notified Jackson's agent, Richard Woods, by telephone in Birmingham, Ala., of their decision. Jackson was examined by Dr. James Andrews earlier Monday in Birmingham, Ala.

Joyce said he felt very strongly that Jackson definitely should not play baseball this year. Other doctors consulted by the Royals thought there was a possibility Jackson may play again, but Joyce believes that was highly uncertain.

Robinson said different doctors gave different time frames for when Jackson would be able to play again.
"Don't count me out," the 28-year-old Jackson said at a brief news conference with Andrews of the Alabama Sports Medicine and Orthopedic Center.

But if Jackson does come back in baseball, it won't be with the Royals. Andrews did not give a specific diagnosis of the hip injury that has kept Jackson out of spring training with the Royals.

News media reports have said that drews said.

Jackson may have avascular necrosis. Medical experts say avascular necrosis generally does not arise from a sudden injury, instead taking years to develop, but it is potentially disabling as the blood flow to the bone is cut.

But Andrews said it was a "significant injury," and blood flow to the hip joint is being monitored.

The doctor declined to elaborate when referring to news reports that Jackson may have avascular necrosis.

"There has been no collapse of his hip joint," Andrews said. "That's the reason we're putting him on

'We're in a protective phase at this point," said the doctor, who left open the possibility that Jackson may eventually be able to play football for the Raiders.

"I know deep down I'll be back playing baseball this year," said Jackson, who is still on crutches.

"Bo's a unique individual who has overcome adversity in the past," AnBo knows injuries

Bo Jackson's career-threatening injury is not the first injury he has suffered in his sports career. Here is a rundown of Jackson's injuries.

1984 — football
Missed half his junior football season in 1984 with Auburn because of a shoulder injury.

1985 — football Sustained a deep thigh bruise and missed the second half of Auburn's 14-10 loss to Florida.

May 31, 1988 — baseball

Tore his left hamstring while running out a groundout at Cleveland. Did not return to action until July 2 (missed about 29 games).

July 26, 1989 — baseball aced on 15-day disabled list with a pulled quadricep muscle in his left leg.

July 17, 1990 — baseball Sustained a subluxation which resulted in minor tissue damage in his left shoulder while attempting a diving catch. Spent July 18 to Aug. 25 on the 21-day disabled list.

Jan 13, 1991 — football

Sustained a fracture-dislocation of his left hip in the Los Angeles Raiders' NFL playoff game. This injury has resulted in cartilage damage in the hip socket.

Adena Hagedorn, junior in political science and a member of the women's golf team, has been an avid golfer since childhood and said she hopes to play professionally.

Golfer enjoys game she chose at age 11

ERIC BROWN

Sports Reporter

To most people, golf is a game that offers a great deal. The outdoor sport offers beautiful scenery, athletic activity and often

But most of all, the sport provides a chance to get outside and enjoy the weather in a leisurely and relaxing form of enjoyment.

Adena Hagedorn is not like most people. For the Manhattan native, a junior at K-State and a standout member of the women's golf team, golf is more than a fun way to spend free time.

In fact, to Hagedom, who has played the game regularly at the Manhattan Country Club since age 11, it's a passion that is as big as life itself.

"I live, eat, breathe and sleep golf," Hagedorn said. "All I think about is golf."

With a single event playing such a big part of one's life, it can make it difficult to function in other areas. Yet, Hagedorn said she attempts to keep a balance.

"I try to live up other aspects of life," Hagedorn said, as she burst into laughter, socially and stuff like that, and yet it seems like even when you go out with a guy, if he doesn't play golf, he's out the door.'

Yet, even with that effort, a dedication of Hagedorn's level causes conflicts at times. 'In the winter, nobody likes to be around me because I'm not playing or competing, and I'm really not in a good mood at that time," she said. But who could blame her for experiencing the winter doldrums? It would most definitely be a trying time for a person who wins a great deal of glory and takes home quite a few medals during the other three seasons of the

"Adena is a hard worker who loves to play the game," said assistant golf coach Mark Elliott. "She's real competitive and doesn't like

"Her consistency and low scores are her biggest contribution to the team. She scores solidly - between 78 and 81 every time out." Hagedorn, as well as being motivated by competition, is her own biggest critic.

"I didn't play well at the first meet," said Hagedorn. "I took 21/4 to 3 weeks to go practice in California with my teacher during Christmas break. I felt like I really missed a lot of opportunities during that golf tournament. I wasn't happy with it and should have scored much better due to my preparation. Plus, I totally blew a million chances last

While her criticism comes from within, it is the guidance at home that has helped Hagedorn get over the top.

"My parents are really behind me, and they've always supported me," she said. "My dad has pushed me, and I've liked it. It didn't bother me that he pushed me.'

Hagedorn finished last season as the team's No.1 scorer with a stroke average of 82.3, while her best collegiate round sits at 76. Elliott said he believes her game is possessing the fundamentals that are needed to play potentially sound golf. "Adena is close to performing at that level," Elliott said. "She hits an awful lot of fairways and greens compared to other girls her age. She just seems to have one bad hole that holds her scores back. Her scores aren't nearly as good as they could be." Elliott said that although her recent averages have been near 79-80, they should be down at 76 if only she could eliminate her poor holes. Hagedorn also has the benefit of being able to play her college career in her hometown. As captain of the Manhattan Indians, she led her team to two state championships in addition to owning the state's top scoring Hagedorn said she treasures the opportunity to play at home for the school she's followed for as long as she can remember.

"Since I've always lived here and my parents have been very active in K-State athletics," Hagedorn said, "I've been exposed to it all my life. I've always supported it. "It makes me feel good, because I've always sat back and watched all the programs proceed, and now I get to be part of it. Hope-

Clark told of terrible driving conditions to and from games and hotels that had sold out their rooms during the break. He said this probably had an effect on how the team performed during the period, in which K-State went 5-5.

SAB accepts 13 new members, fills open seats

Students pursue leadership

MEREDITH JONES

Collegian Reporter

The Kansas State University Student Alumni Board has 13 new members as of March 7.

The new members were picked after a selection process of two interviews and a reception, said Tresa Weaver, coordinator of alumni clubs.

Weaver said the Alumni Association sent a letter to all living groups, both on and off campus, and asked for two nominations from each.

Nominations can also be made by campus administrators, department heads and deans, or interested students can fill out an applications.

Weaver said she had more than 180 nominations and received 88 applications.

A point system was used, and the students' names were not used. Grade point average and campus involvement were considered, and then the group was cut to 45 students.

The first interview was conducted by the current members of the SAB. They looked for knowledge of the University and enthusiasm.

To see how well the student relates with alumni, a second interview was conducted by a group of alumni.

Points from the two interviews were added together, and the group was cut to 24 for the reception.

The reception was for all current SAB members, Alumni Association staff and the new candidates.

Following the reception March 7, the 13 new members were chosen.

The SAB is kept at 25 members, and new members only fill the spots of those graduating or leaving the SAB for some other reason. Members are on the board until they graduate and have responsibilities on committees.

Some activities the SAB helps with are alumni gatherings, the annual homecoming dance, reunions, recruitment, College Night programs and a Parents' Weekend golf tournament, which just started last fall.

Weaver said there are three officers, and the rest are committee heads.

"So everyone in the group ends up in a leadership position," she said.

Improved campus lighting proposed

By the Collegian Staff

Campus safety is something that concerns everyone at K-State. The Campus Safety Task Force, along with the Illuminating Enginneering Society (IES), together, have proposed a plan to increase lighting on campus.

Rob Dieringer, campus safety director with student government and senior in construction science, said the task force had submitted a report and the administration has agreed with its recommendations.

"We are going to work with administration on prioritizing which of the areas need to be worked on," Dieringer said. "The IES, along with facilities, is proposing to put lights in the Union parking lot, as well as other parts of campus.'

The IES has been testing which areas need the most work by measuring how much light is being thrown from the light bulbs. This measurement is called a foot-candle.

A foot-candle is a unit for measuring illumination. A foot-candle is equal to the amount of direct light thrown by one candle on a square foot of surface - every part which is one foot away.

"IES recommends one-half footcandle on the horizontal and vertical planes," said Patrick Prendergast, senior in architectural engineering and member of IES.

IES has encountered some problems with measuring the existing light. The availability of light meters has been one of the problems. Although funds were donated to IES to purchase another light meter, the problem caused the IES to work overtime to produce results for

"We had a lot of volunteers. About 200 man-hours were put in. They did two shifts a night to get it done," said Prendergast.

John Lambert, director of campus safety, said it would probably take a year for IES to finish the measurements and as of now, his office has not received any results from the study.

According to the K-State Police Department and the task force report, K-State has the second lowest crime rate among Big Eight schools.

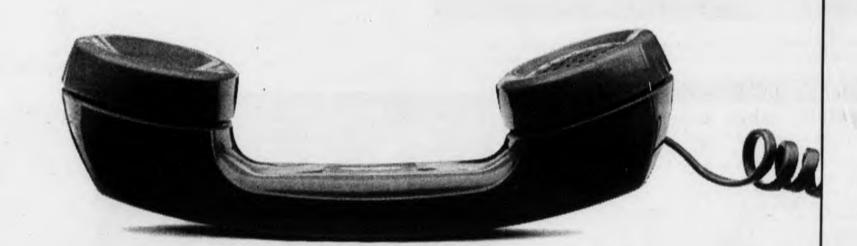

Since safety is the issue, there has been some deliberation about fire access when the new lights go up.

"One of the things we are doing this coming year is replacing the sidewalks and heavily reinforcing them for fire access," said Ed Rice, assistant vice president for facilities.

Lambert said facilities planning has also been informed about the proper spacing needed between the lights that will allow fire engines to drive between them.

The funds allocated for this plan come from the administration's special maintenance fund, Rice said.

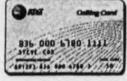

Facilities planning is currently working to implement the plan this semester.

R.E.M. strays from old style

Group experiments with instruments to create unique sound

Collegian Reviewer

For about a decade, R.E.M. has defined what most people describe as the "college music sound."

In their early days, they clawed their way out of the Athens, Ga., music scene with a non-stop routine of touring and recording new albums. With the brand-new "Out-of Time," R.E.M. rejects their past and

It's been more than two years since the last R.E.M. record, "Green," was released. In conjunction with their tradition of politically oriented songs, it was released on Election Day 1988.

Fans and critics alike dubbed it the ever-popular "sellout," because the band had moved from the independently distributed I.R.S. Records to the larger Warner Brothers label.

Well, you can still buy R.E.M. at your local Wal-Mart, but don't expect many hit singles from "Out of Time." Only a couple songs on the album even sound like R.E.M.

Experiments with different instruments such as harpsichords, bongos, horns and organs are sprinkled throughout its entirety, and there are many guest musicians. In fact, more than half of the songs have string arrangements. This time around, the lyrical content is also drastically different from past R.E.M. songs. Rather than writing about politics, singer Micheal Stipe chose such simplicities as "memory and time and love."

The only remotely political track is the album's opener, "Radio Song." It's title, however, is a bit deceiving. Rather than being a song tailored for the radio, it's an indictment of the current state of radio.

As the surprisingly danceable song unfolds, Stipe sings "The world is collapsing around our ears/I turned off the radio."

The occasional "hey"s and "hup"s of guest vocalist KRS-One (of Boogie Down Productions) can be heard. Then, toward the song's end, KRS-One breaks into a rap, saying "Now our children grow up prisoners/All their life, radio listeners.

For "Out of Time," R.E.M. went for a live sound. On seven songs, guitarist Peter Buck had some help from studio musician Peter Holsapple.

On six of those, Holsapple played rhythm guitar, while Buck played another instrument into a live microphone. For the first single, "Losing My Religion," it was the familiar mandolin.

"Losing My Religion" is one of the few songs that have the characteristic R.E.M. sound, but its structure is certainly not. The whole song seems to blur together, as Stipe sings constantly varying melodies over the repetitive guitar line.

This was a good choice for a single, because it grows on you. Since radio stations and MTV have the curious habit of playing the same songs over and over, maybe it will be at least two weeks before people tire of this one.

There are even a couple songs where Stipe sounds like a totally different person. "Texarkana" is a basic, uplifting track, while "Near Wild Heaven" finds Stipe doing Beach Boy-style harmonies.

The really happy song on "Out of Time" is evident from its title, though. "Shiny Happy People" has Kate Pierson of the B-52s merrily singing along with Stipe - "Shiny happy people holding hands." It starts off with a slow Lynyrd Skynyrd-sounding intro, but quickly gets more upbeat when Stipe, tongue planted firmly in cheek, yells "Here we go!"

Songs like the organ-driven "Low" and the simplistic "Belong" showcase the darker side of the band, but don't sustain repeated listenings very well. The chorus for the former is just "low, low, low/low, low, low," while the latter is comprised of two parts. Stipe mumbles some muddy spoken words for the verse and merely harmonizes on the chorus.

Basically, "Out of Time" is a big slap in the face for people who liked 'The One I Love" (from 1987's "Document"). Though "Stand" (from "Green") was a cute song, R.E.M. isn't even going to tour to support the album. It's good to hear the band grow and, although it's inconsistent, Out of Time" is immensely good.

Non-chacteristic R.E.M.

Donovan Kundiger, Manhattan resident, argued these areas were already high density. He also said many citizens wanted the University to pay their salaries but do not want the students, who support K-State, living in their neighborhoods.

The area around K-State has historically been something that has been an area of housing for students," Kundiger said. "Growing up in that area, I don't recall any problems with the density.

"Also, I think the traffic that was brought up should be kept in mind, but we also ought to realize that when the students live next to K-State, they walk.'

Kundiger said many of the houses around the campus have already been converted to apartments. He also said a problem exists in the condition these buildings are in, and rehabilitation is not a realistic idea for many of the structures.

"We've got trash down on Bluemont," he said. "I'm embarrassed to drive down the street. But we can't change it because we've down-zoned the area. Who is going to come in and tear down a house like that and put something else there? What is your alternative? What's going to go in Jan Borst, Manhattan resident, said rehabilitation of the old houses does work.

"We don't have throw-away housing. We should stop exploiting for the short term and start investing for the future. It is possible to rehabilitate. We don't have to build highdensity housing," she said.

She said she has big plans for herself, as well as her team.

"I think we're going to accomplish more than even the athletic department expects," she said. "We've got so much potential. It's just a matter of keeping our heads in the game and playing to our potential. Every one of those girls can play really well. It comes down to thinking out there and just doing it.'

Her goals don't stop there. She said she dreams of winning a Big Eight title next season and contending well enough this year to win some tournaments in the spring.

Down the line, her big fantasy is to play professional golf.

"I've got a year left to see how I'm playing, but it's always been my dream to go on tour, and I fully intend to stay in the golf business through teaching, but more so, I'd really want to play," Hagedorn said.

Elliott said that with some improvement, she is capable of just such a feat.

Also, he said it would take scores in the range of upper-60s to 70 to make the tour, and if she continues to work, it is a possibility. Yet, in individual sports, the burden lies with the participant.

"I've always liked pressure," Hagedorn said, "and I'm an aggressive player so it doesn't bother me. It makes me work hard and get more enthused.'

NICOSIA, Cyprus - President Hashemi Rafsanjani of Iran met Monday with a leader of the Lebanese group believed to control Western hostages in Lebanon, as new efforts were reported to secure the hostages' release.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said Sheik Subhi Tufaili briefed Rafsanjani on developments in Lebanon. Tufaili leads the Hezbollah, or Party of God, an umbrella group for radical Shiite Muslim groups believed holding Western hostages.

IRNA said Rafsanjani also met separately with Fathi Shaqaqi, described as an official from the Islamic Jihad, a group belonging to

The hostages are believed to include six Americans, four Britons, two West Germans and an Italian. The longest held is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for the Associated Press, who on Saturday marked the beginning of his seventh year in captivity.

IRNA did not say whether the hostages were discussed in the meetings. It said Jebril reported to the president on what was happening in Israeli-occupied territory.

Faculty Senate proposes KCT representation

ELVYN JONES

City/Government Editor

Faculty Senate took the first step needed to allow representation for faculty members of the Kansas Technical College in Salina Tuesday.

The Senate approved a proposal to amend its constitution to allow at least three faculty members of KCT to serve on the Senate representing a ninth college.

Under the current Senate constitution, senators are elected from extension, the library, the general administration and the eight colleges of the University.

The proposal must now be adopted in a meeting of the general faculty at a meeting Friday in Forum Hall.

Brad Fenwich, associate professor of pathology, said KCT would be considered much like the College of Veterinary Medicine because KCT would also continue to have its own independent line-item budget from the Kansas Board of Regents.

The Kansas Legislature still must pass enabling legislation allowing the merger of K-State and KCT. The legislation is expected to pass this Both K-State and KCT faculty have further work to do before the merger is complete, Fenwich said.

"It may very well change our faculty handbook to make exemptions for KCT, just as there are exemptions for veterinary medicine," he said.

Fenwich told one of the three KCT instructors attending the meeting that KCT faculty should study the K-State faculty handbook to find the areas where exemptions may be curriculum requests made by KCT with little or no debate.

Likewise, Fenwich said the Senate

But in areas where there may be doubts, such as duplication of classes offered at both K-State and KCT, KCT should be prepared to present a case for the proposals.

To reduce the problem of salary compression between senior and junior faculty members, Fenwick said an agreement had been reached with the college deans - and approved by the administration — to give greater salary increases with faculty promotions.

Those promotions approved this year will receive the increases starting July 1, 1992.

Fenwich said the compression problem developed when senior faculty salaries failed to keep pace with increases in entry-level salaries needed to attract new faculty members.

The arrangement, however, will not reverse salary compression of faculty members already in senior positions. Fenwich said there are currently discussions with the administration to arrange a bonus system for those senior faculty members.

K-State's bleak funding prospects in the Kansas Legislature were also James Koelliker, professor of engineering, said the budget cuts proposed by the House Appropriations Committee are a disaster for K-State.

"In the past three years, we have had an increase of 4,200 students with no new resources," he said. "To put it in prospective, that represents the equivalent to the enrollment of would probably pass academic and Fort Hays State."

Woman chief discusses tribes' role

Pride in heritage increasing in today's society

By the Collegian Staff

Wilma Mankiller, the first woman to become principle chief of the Cherokee Nation, talked Tuesday about the history of the Cherokee tribe and the role of the Cherokee Nation in today's society.

"We have a very strong emphasis on social programs and social deve-lopment," Mankiller said.

"More and more people are needing to avail themselves to direct services like health benefits and educational benefits," she said. "I also think that more people have a sense of pride in their heritage."

The Cherokee Nation is the second largest tribe in the United States, with about 118,000 members, Mankiller said. Membership has increased by 40,000 in the last

The Cherokee Nation began after 1838 when the United States Government removed the entire Cherokee tribe from the Southeast to Indian Territory in Oklahoma.

During this relocation, onefourth of the tribe's population died. It is known as the "Trail of Tears" due to the great sacrifices made by the tribe, Mankiller said.

Beginning in the early 1840s, the Cherokee Nation established newspapers in Cherokee and English, built a judicial system throughout Oklahoma and started an educational system. Mankiller said she feels the

Temporary dean of education to fill position permanently

National search ends with promotion of Holen, who beats out 40 other applicants

Michael Holen has been selected as the new dean of the College of

The position became vacant last year when the former dean resigned. Holen had been serving as interim dean since then.

A committee of 13, composed of eight representatives of each department in the college, two students, a representative of the Kansas school districts, the dean of engineering and a representative of the department chairs chose Holen from more than 40 applicants, said Robert Zabel, professor of education and chairman of the committee. "He (Holen) is a very bright person and has an established track record here," Zabel said.

Holen said he has been at K-State in the College of Education for about 20 years, serving as associate dean for 11 years; director of graduate students, grants and contracts; head of the department of administration and foundations of education; and a faculty member for five years.

"He has impeccable academic qualifications," Zabel said.

Holen said he has a bachelor's in history and literature from Stanford University and master's and doctorate in educational psychology from Oregon University.

Zabel said the selection committee started a national search for a new dean in September 1990, advertising in several journals. The screening of applications began in December.

"We wanted someone who had de, monstrated administrative success at a collegewide level; had financial and organizational skills; could work with various constituencies; could provide evidence of having a vision of where we (the College of Education) should be in the future and finally; could provide evidence they were supportive of pluralism," he Zabel said, "Dr. Holen had the experience and ability. He clearly emerged as the strongest applicant.

There were a number of reasons he best met all the criteria. He has to offer an intimate knowledge and understanding of this college and its role in the University, state and region and a strong commitment to programs that emphasize serving the needs of Kansas and the nation.

"All of those kind of things relate to leadership abilities," he said. Holen said being interim dean had both advantages and disadvantages when being interviewed.

"I already knew the elements of the University, but there weren't many secrets of my style," Holen said. "You don't always make people

He said although he has been in the position for more than a year, there will be some changes.

"There's a big difference between an interim position and the actual position. You are careful of your actions," Holen said. Holen said he plans to invest time and money in increasing the college's technology. "If we are going to provide a leading edge, we have to do

"I also want to emphasize the college's role in promoting diversity in students, faculty and curriculum," he Holen said he is extremely pleased to be chosen as new dean.

"I enjoyed the interview process," he said. "The committee asked excellent questions. The selection process strengthened my conviction this was what I wanted to do.'

suspect for arson

The Riley County Police De-partment arrested a 21-year-old Manhattan man Monday in connection with six suspicious fires that occurred on Manhattan's south side earlier this year.

Daniel Pharis, 716 Pottawatomie Ave., was brought in early Monday morning for questioning and was arrested. He was still being held Tuesday evening on $6,000 bond.

Police said they believe Pharis started six fires in January and February.

The first fire was in an abandoned apartment complex at 800 S. 8th St., owned by First Manhattan Builders. The second fire occurred Jan. 24 at Howie's Recycling, 626 S. 10th St.

Three fires occurred overnight Jan. 28. The most recent fire was Feb. 16 in a greenhouse owned by Mike Crubel, at 800 S. Juliette

Police said they have no other suspects, but investigations are continuing.

Students awarded Mellons

A cellist for the KSU Orchestra and the deputy press secretary for Gov. Joan Finney have won Mellon Fellowships in the Humanities.

Amy Brooks, a May 1990 graduate in English, and Mark Schmeller, a May 1990 graduate in history, were chosen from a group of 26 interviewed Feb. 1-3 in Dallas. Kansans won five of the 12 Mellon Fellowships awarded in the region. 'It was hard because I went in there without any idea of what they wanted," Brooks said. "Rather than telling them what they wanted to hear. I tried to show them my most original ideas."

The scholarships provide a cash stipend of $11,500, plus tuition and fees for one year of graduate study. They are renewable for a second year, and a stipend is available to students continuing work for their dissertations.

"You have to have an instructor recommend you to even get an application," Brooks said. Brooks said nominees must also submit an essay and three letters of recommendation. "The essay was basically a letter of intent for graduate school," Brooks

Brooks said in her essay she discussed her interest in feminist methodology and studying non-verbal elements of drama as metaphors. "I think they placed a lot of emphasis on the essay," she said. Brooks and Schmeller both said that right now they are unsure which university they will attend.

Brooks said Rutgers University is her first choice, and she is also looking at the University of Michigan or the University of Texas in Austin.

Schmeller said he hopes to study American history at the University of Chicago. The period after the Civil War through about 1920 especially interests Schmeller, and after obtaining his doctorate, he hopes to teach and write, he said.

"It's nice to approach grad school with a sense of economic emancipation," Schmeller said.

Yeltsin challenges Kremlin system

MOSCOW (AP) - President Mikhail Gorbachev saw Sunday's nationwide referendum as a way to pressure leaders of the 15 republics to bow to central control.

But, the vote may have given his rival Boris Yeltsin a powerful new way to challenge the Kremlin.

Preliminary results of Sunday's vote show that 82 percent of the 178 million eligible Soviet voters cast ballots. Of those, 78 percent voted in favor of preserving the union — as Gorbachev

At the same time, more than half the 100 million voters in the republic of Russia approved a separate measure to strengthen the post of Russian president and allow a direct popular vote among competing candidates.

Yeltsin, president of the Russian parliament, is favored to win such an election, despite a plan by hard-line Communist lawmakers to dump him at a congress scheduled March 28.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Farm state lawmakers and commodity groups complained Tuesday the 1990 farm law is failing to deliver on a promise to give producers more flexibility in their planting options.

"The work of the 1990 farm bill is not finished," said Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., chairman of the House Agriculture subcommittee on wheat, soybeans and feed grains.

He said he promised the panel soon would consider legislation to do shop mechanic work to correct problems occurring as the Agriculture Department implements the new farm program.

Copeland convicted, to be sentenced

CHILLICOTHE, Mo. (AP) - The state presented evidence Tuesday in an effort to show the death penalty is justified for an elderly farmer convicted of killing five drifters.

But the defense contended the defendant, Ray Copeland, 76, already suffers from a brain disease that will cause his death.

The jury of seven women and five men found Copeland guilty Monday on five counts of first-degree murder for the shooting deaths of five transient farm workers he hired to help in a cattlebuying swindle.

At a separate hearing that started Tuesday in Livingston County Circuit Court, the jury weighed evidence and testimony on which of two sentences to recommend: death or life in prison without Copeland would be the oldest person sentenced to death in Missouri.

County reinstates jail supervisor

ABILENE (AP) - The Dickinson County Commission has reinstated a jail supervisor fired by the sheriff after the escape of two inmates went unnoticed for eight days.

However, supervisor Bob Meadows will be suspended with pay pending a March 28 grievance hearing, officials said.

Sheriff Carl McDonald fired Meadows following the escape of Herbert Montanye, 49, and Steven Baker, 35, who were awaiting sentencing on federal drug charges.

The inmates, who sawed out of the jail Feb. 18 with a smuggled hacksaw blade, were not discovered missing until Feb.

About 100 county residents discussed jail operations with the county commission during a Monday meeting.

Kansas man charged with felony

MANHATTAN (AP) - Riley County officials have charged a 25-year-old Council Grove man, who allegedly wrote numerous bad checks along with his father across Kansas, a prosecutor said.

Tim Choate was charged Tuesday with one felony count of writing false checks, prosecutor Bill Kenney said. He waived extradition to Clay County in Missouri, where he had been charged with the rape of a 14-year-old girl in Liberty, Kennedy said. Choate and his father, Floyd, were arrested last week in Floyd Choate, 44, was being held in Shawnee County. He had not been charged with anything, county officials said.

Defendants face additional charges

PITTSBURG (AP) - Three more charges were filed Tuesday against two defendants already charged with first-degree murder in the death of a county drug informant.

Crawford County Attorney Tammi Sullinger said she added charges of aggravated kidnapping, aggravated battery and conspiracy to commit murder against Troy Johnson, 26, and Shawn Winkfield, 25, both of Pittsburg.

They were being held without bond pending a preliminary hearing Monday.

Sullinger issued a gag order Monday for the Crawford County Sheriff's Department on any information relating to the slaying of Steven Boyce, whose body was found in a strip mine pit a week

Sheriff Linn Fields confirmed earlier Monday that Boyce was an informant for his department. He said Boyce, 34, of Parsons, was killed last week in a drug deal that went sour.

Statue removed from Statehouse

TOPEKA (AP) - A local anti-smoking activist said Tuesday he was not surprised when state workers removed from the Kansas Statehouse a replica of the Statue of Liberty holding a lit cigarette and clutching a pack of them.

"It's typical of Philip Morris to stifle free speech," said Dave Pomeroy, a member of Kansans for Non-Smokers' Rights.

However, Taggarty Patrick, a spokeswoman for Philip Morris USA, denied the company had any involvement in the incident. Pomeroy said the 12-foot statue, called Nicotina, is a response to Philip Morris USA's sponsorship of a traveling exhibit on the U.S. Constitution's Bill of Rights. The exhibit, which will be seen in all 50 state capitals, opens in Topeka on Thursday.

Philip Morris makes Marlboro, Virginia Slims and Benson and Hedges cigarettes.

Nicotina holds a giant cigarette where Liberty holds a torch and a package of cigarettes in the crook of her other arm. It was set up late Monday afternoon and removed Tuesday after some lawmakers decided it was in poor taste.

"Killing thousands of people a day is not in good taste," Pomeroy said. "What's in bad taste is Philip Morris using the Bill of Rights in such a perverted manner."

"They are free to express their viewpoints; that's what we're celebrating in the Bill of Rights," Patrick said.

Asked if Philip Morris had contacted legislators to protest having Nicotina on display, she replied, "No, we did not. The statue is the work of a health professionals' group, Doctors

Greek council stresses need to achieve desirable future

SUZANNE BROWN

Collegian Reporter

"Picture The Future...Develop It Today" was the focus of the annual conference of the Mid-American Interfratemity and Panhellenic Council Associations Conference March 7-10 in St. Louis.

"K-State had about 14 attending, and 1,300 attended total," said Barb Robel, greek affairs adviser. "The Mid-American region encompasses 15 states, from North Dakota to Texas and Colorado to Ohio.'

The conference theme was developed to stress the need to "stop reacting to the environment and what's happening in greek life, and to move to a more proactive stance, envisioning the desirable future for fraternities and sororities and then implementing strategies to achieve this future," according to a flier about the conference.

"There were about 80 educational sessions, they ranged from Interfraternity and Panhellenic programming to chapter programming to personal development," Robel

"The programs presented ranged from training rush counselors to scholarship to creativity, multiculturalism, judicial processes, alcohol education, AIDS education and liability.'

Jenny Barenberg, president of Panhellenic Council and participant in the conference, said there was a lot of communication concerning policies, especially alcohol policies.

"There were workshops and roundtables with other Panhellenic presidents and these were a great way to get ideas, and it was a really good time to share the various ways situations were handled on our campus," Baren-

"There were great guest speakers, including one on creativity and a futurist," she said. We also attended some judicial board meetings. "Although we have not officially made any decisions, I think we will be looking into the establishment of a judicial board in our Panhellenic Council. The board would enforce policies and deal with hazing and rush infractions.' Robel said that since the conference ended March 10, there has not yet been the chance to put ideas together.

"There are several things I'd like to see happen and the officers do also, so we need to prioritize those," Robel said.

Barenberg said one of the highlights of the conference was the election of Mindy Loughman as a western-area vice president.

"The MAPCA is divided into five regions and one officer is chosen from each. We are in the western division, and it is a big honor for Mindy to be chosen as this officer," Barenberg said.

Mindy Loughman, junior in life science/ pre-nursing is currently the Panhellenic Council secretary. In the position of westernarea vice president, Loughman will oversee the states of Kansas, Colorado and Nebraska.

"My main role is to recruit for the Mid-American Panhellenic Council Association - to get sororities to become a part of it," Loughman said. "Membership must be renewed annually, so I will also be responsible for making sure the memberships are renewed.

"I will also act as a facilitator of communication between the members. A resource network exists between them about programs that are successful, and we help relay that "If a problem exists, we try to find out a program that is successful at another university that may solve the problem.'

Loughman will also be responsible for coordinating the western-area conference in Fall 1991, which Loughman said will probably be at K-State.

"I was very honored to be elected to this position. The Mid-American Panhellenic Association has a lot to offer, and I'm excited to let the K-State system know about it," Loughman said.

Dennis O'Keefe, administrative vice president of Interfratemity Council, also attended the conference. He said he also felt there were excellent speakers.

"The speakers were top-notch people from across the country. Out of all the conferences I've attended, this was the most beneficial," O'Keefe said.

The establishment of a judicial board may also be a consideration of the Interfraternity Council. O'Keefe said.

"It will be a body that will establish more involvement and take some of the pressure off of the executive council," O'Keefe said.

"Another interesting idea we obtained was that of party watchers," he said. "These would be people that greek affairs would interview and appoint to go around and monitor

"They would ensure that food was available and alcohol policies were being enforced. A lot of the universities that had this program said these positions were really prominent ones. I think it would work out

At the conference, the 25th anniversary of Mid-American Interfraternity Council was celebrated.

Writer to read short stories

K-State alumna writes about problems that often deal with sex O'Connor Award for Short Fiction for her short story collection titled,

HOPE SWARTZ

Collegian Reporter

Award-winning short story writer and K-State alumna, Debra Monroe, will return to campus Thursday to read one of her short stories.

"She writes about rural people, usually people who aren't highlyeducated but have a serious and compelling problem," said Steve Heller, associate professor of English. "Often, the problems deal with sex.

'Her characters are comic but serious. Most meet tragic ends, but how they deal with them is funny." Monroe received the Flannery 'The Source of Trouble, 1990." Her short stories have been published in such magazines as North Dakota Quarterly, Great Stream Review and K-State's Touchstone, and she is working on her first novel.

"They're not depressing stories, although bad things happen," said Deborah Murray, instructor of composition. "I prefer the term 'ambivalent redemption.' They don't live happily ever after. Kind of like, 'life sucks, but we live it anyway."

Murray said she and Monroe were friends when they attended K-State graduate school.

"She wrote poetry and short stories while she was here," Murray said. "But I was really surprised when I read her book. She's become a much better writer.

"The writer has to draw off experiences. All fiction is based on real life, although I hope not completely.'

The reading will be at 4:30 p.m. March 21 in the Union 212 and is open to the public.

UPC accepts entries for 16th annual photography contest

By the Collegian Staff

The Union Program Council Arts Committee is accepting entries from students, faculty and staff for the 16th Annual UPC Photography Contest until April

Last year the contest attracted 135 entries, and committee members said they are expecting even more this year.

"Every year it gets a little more organized and word gets out," said Darcy Frick, contest co-coordinator. "It's a great PR event for K-State and Union Program Council

The photos can be either black and white or color. They are divided into seven divisions including animals, landscapes, people and nature.

Entries will be judged on technical quality, visual design, originality, presentation and visual placement, Frick said.

"The only requirement as far as presentation goes is that they must be matted, but if people go out of their way and frame their photographs, it will really help the judges," Frick said. "Judges will look at presentation this year also."

Three judges are selected every year from different departments. This year they will be David Von Riesen, instructor of photography, who also judged the event last year; Ed Sturr, professor of art, and Charles Stroh, professor of art.

'The overall quality is surprisingly good," said David Adams, photographer in the Veterinary Medical Center and past judge.

Bill Monroe and the Bluegrass Boys Father of Bluegrass From the World Famous WSM

Grand Ole Opry

Saturday, March 23, 8 p.m. Bluegrass--folk music in overdrive-began in 1945 when Bill Monroe recruited a quintet to showcase his distinctive style: down-home mandolin playing and a countertenior voice that hits high notes with the impact of a Louis Armstrong trumpet. A member of the Grand Ole Opry since 1939, Monroe has taken bluegrass a long way, winning election to the Country Music Hall of Fame and recognition by the U.S. Senate as "a force of signal importance in our time." Others have taken up the style, but there's still no one who plays bluegrass like Bill does. Come to McCain, sit a spell, and listen to an American original.

Environmental situation may be irreparable

United States history is the plight of the Native American. Forced from the land they had inhabited before the colonial expansion across the North American continent, Native Americans have lived out their subsequent generations in the shadow of this dominant white culture.

Native Americans caught the diseases of this invading society. When Native Americans drank the drink of the Anglo culture, they found themselves desperately susceptible to its effects. When the Native Americans tried to fight against the growing nation that threatened their lifestyle, they lost their wars to it. As a conquered people, Native America has been forced to exist within the confines of an alien society, and to live by the rules that its conqueror (as a military victor) felt compelled "by right" to impose.

Everyone knows some version of the story, and many mourn the plight of the Native American. But perhaps the real tragedy lies in the fact that although many acknowledge the treatment of the Native American was unfair, the wrong now seems unrightable. Our own American society is permanently established, and it depends upon the land from which the Native American has been displaced. No concession - short of relinquishing the the few remaining Native Americans - is large enough to compensate for the historic wrong that has been done to this people.

This wrong is irredeemable. There seems no properly scaled, realistic solution to this problem. In the instant of its infancy, the United States behaved badly, and the experience of the nation's subsequent maturation and adulthood has taught it no way to repair the damage that it has done.

There is a lot of talk these days about learning from the mistakes of the past. Perhaps the plight of the Native American can offer one more hard lesson to America and to the contemporary world culture as well.

The continuing toll of environmental exploitation has implications which are potentially as tragic and as uncorrectable as those of the unfortunate history of the Native Americans. Often-used terms like "vanishing wilderness" suggest that humankind knows what is at stake. But the progress that sometimes calls for the demolition of the remaining wilderness is a swifter vehicle than that which usually chauffeurs environmental concession. Progress is the more practiced art. We are up to its challenges, and we are good at succeeding.

This is not to imply environmental issues have only recently become a public concern. For years people have made efforts to help preserve the environment, and now we are experiencing a renewed concern. Large-scale recycling efforts are a good example of this and are, of course, admirable,

But the truth remains that while environmental concessions require widespread public support and participation to make any difference at all, it takes only a few people to do detrimental and irreparable damage to the environment. Corporate greed may be responsible for the demolition of the rainforests an unforgivable act — but carelessness can result in environmental disaster as well.

Once when I was a child I chased a rabbit out into the street where it was hit by a car and killed. There was a horrible moment while I watched the rabbit try to outrun the wheels of the car. When it failed, I was heartbroken and guilt-ridden by what I'd done. I went to where the dead rabbit lay and carried it away from the street. But there was no way to revive it. There was no way to restore life to the thing I had caused to die.

And there will be no way to restore the natural earth once it has been demolished. Maybe it will never vanish entirely. Maybe we will preserve trees and animals in parks and zoos, ordering them like specimens in a laboratory. Maybe we will establish "reservations" for wildlife in areas where it is convenient for us to keep it.

But just as reservations are no home or promised land for the Native Americans, parks and zoos will never take the place of wilderness on the planet. Some things are beyond any cultural understanding. The order that we are capable of imposing upon many aspects of nature is only a slanted interpretation of the natural state. Once the natural state is converted entirely into our vision of it, it will no longer exist.

I watched the rabbit as it tried to outrun the wheels of the car, but the rabbit failed. The wilderness is not even as mobile as the rabbit I chased into the street. The wilderness is fixed in place, but vulnerable nevertheless to the methods of modern technology. There is no place for the wilderness to run. It is defensless against our weaponry. It cannot run from the wheels.

Yet there is the horrible moment as we watch the wheels approach. There is the dream-like, but all-too-real, frozen instant before the impact. It may be what we are now witnessing. The vanishing wilderness is no myth. Nothing is beyond extinction. Is there anyone who won't regret the irreparable wrong we are capable of doing to our planet once it has been done?

ut it's not too late. There is still time. There is a lot of talk about learning from the mistakes of the past, and l think that we can do it. We are driving the wilderness from the planet like the American colonists drove the Native Americans from the land. Unless we stop, the consequences may be just as regrettable and just as dire.

Once they've been made, there is no way to correct some mistakes. There is no way back from certain circumstances once they have been established. The only way to make a difference is to give a damn. And the only way to give a damn is to try to make a

Lines of communication key in Lady Cats' crisis

The Lady Cats and Coach Susan Yow have resorted to namecalling and pointing fingers at each other.

Monday, Yow announced that three returning players -Mary Jo Miller, Leah Honeycutt and Polly Williams - had been released from the team, but left the door open for possible reinstatements. Miller later confirmed a report that she had returned to the team.

Much was expected from the team that returned four starters from a successful 1989-90 campaign, and much was expected from Yow, who was described as an intense coach with the ability to get the most out of her players.

But a mid-season slump doomed Big Eight Conference title hopes, and Yow vented her frustration to the press, saying the players had bad attitudes and not enough desire to win.

The Lady Cats were less vocal about possible problems, but their uninspired play in the second round of the Big Eight Tournament spoke in volumes.

The full story may never be known, but the scholarships of Honeycutt and Williams should not be revoked. They committed to K-State, and K-State should commit to them.

Basketball is a team sport, but a team can't win when it can't communicate with the coach - as was proven by the way the Lady Cats finished the

Such behavior, by both the players and Yow, is childish and detrimental to the future of Lady Cats' basketball. Yow must eliminate the aura of bad feelings surrounding the women's basketball program and create a positive atmosphere.

It is now the coaching staff's responsibility to open the lines of communication with the players - before namecalling and pointed fingers become the

Regarding the need to convert K-177 to a four-lane highway (Collegian, March 18), it is noted that the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce President Randy Martin laments that K-State is the "only Big Eight school not connected to a four-lane highway." So what? We are also the only school that has had three Rhodes Scholars in the past 15 months. Does that also mean we have a problem? Second, the local chamber president points out that the highway "would create jobs and enhance the local economy." True, but so would the expenditure of $20 million to build a major addition to the K-State library, or any other similar expenditure on infrastructure. For that matter, a permanent increase of $2 million in the K-State base budget would do more long-run good for the local economy than a one-shot $20-million expenditure on the new highway. K-State officials should be working now to form a coalition to implement some reordering of the priorities along the lines.

Martin misses the point. The issue is, how should society best use its scarce economic and financial resources in an era of limits and austerity? K-177 is a sound, safe and beautiful drive in its current status. It is one of the most attractive roads in Kansas. Any major change would be a net detriment. There is no need to convert this road to four lanes. Who is responsible for making decisions of this magnitude? Is it the people of the community or a handful of chamber of commerce leaders whose main interest is to attract a few new industries to the city? I asked my Principles of Economics class of 160 students how many believed this expenditure would be a wise use of state and local resources. Four students raised their hands.

I applaud the Manhattan League of Women Voters for having the intelligence and courage to speak up on this issue. I am embarrassed at the number in this community who should know better that are keeping silent on this issue. Anyone with even moderately developed sensibilities in the areas of aesthetics and social priorities recognizes the decision to convert K-177 to four lanes as a grotesque misallocation of the limited resources of the state and community. The decision takes resources away from state universities, local schools and libraries, parks and other things that provide benefits to people. It is a decision that will make Manhattan a less attractive place to live in the future. Lloyd Thomas

Give it up

Editor,

March 20 is the first day of spring - symbol of rebirth and renewal. It is also the day of the Great American Meatout, when thousands of consumer, environmental and animal-protection advocates throughout North America will ask their friends and neighbors to "kick the meat habit," at least for a day, and to explore a less violent, more wholesome diet.

The purpose of the Great American Meatout is to alert the American people to the devastating effects of today's runaway "factory farming" practices on consumer health, food resources, environmental quality and animal welfare. It is absolutely vital that American consumers receive this information at least once a year to make an informed allocation of their food dollars - in the face of the daily barrage of propaganda from the meat

Public concern for these effects of animal agriculture has been heightened in recent months by a number of important disclosures:

■ A study of 6,500 Chinese by Cornell University has documeted conclusively that a meatless diet prevents heart disease, stroke, cancer and other chronic diseases responsible for the annual crippling and death of 1.5 million Americans.

■ A study of 88,000 nurses by Boston's Brigham and Women's Hospital found that those who eat meat are twice as likely to get colon cancer as those who don't.

■ A finding by the U.S. Department of Energy shows that conversion of 140 million acres of cropland from animal feed to trees or other combustible biomass could generate 46 billion Btu of energy per day - currently obtained from the eight million barrels of oil imported daily by the United States.

■ Determination by California water authorities that the state's desperate water shortage is due largely to irrigation of animal-feed croplands.

The great American Meatout is one of the nation's largest and most exciting grassroots public interest campaigns. It involves thousands of participants in hundreds of colorful promotional events in all 50 states and several Canadian provinces. These range from simple "steakouts" (informational tables collecting Meatout pledges) to elaborate "Lifestivals" featuring speakers, entertainers, exhibits and videos, and samplings of meatless

Column on target

After reading the headline to Shawn Bruce's column on date rape, I almost passed over it because I wasn't in the mood to be provoked or angered. But I'm glad I stopped and

First of all, I commend him on watching the program on date rape. Many men and women would have flipped the channel in favor of lighter viewing, like "Who's the Boss?"

I was surprised to find I agree with Bruce's objections to the one-sided portrayal of men in the show. Though I am a feminist, I also consider myself a humanist — meaning I care about the well-being of and fairness toward both sexes. I'm in favor of mutual respect.

He's right - men are often "bashed" in rape-prevention programs. Women have been told to trust no men who show an even passing interest in them. We're warned against touches and advances because "men just can't help themselves." I have had to remind myself time and again that there are still men out there who respect my right to control what happens to my body

Unfortunately, date rape is a sickeningly frequent occurrence. It is a problem, even on our campus. Much of it is due to attitudes: Him: "She really means yes," and "I knew her, so it wasn't really rape."

Her: "I did make out with him - I led him on," and "Maybe I deserved it for being so

None of these are ever true.

Rape prevention begins with everyone. Men need to learn that "no" means just that, nothing else. Women need to take control of their bodies and minds and not define themselves by the men in their lives. "Getting a man" does not make you more of a whole woman

I wish programs like the one Bruce objected to weren't necessary, but they are until we make some changes in our attitudes toward sex and relationships

Prime time to plant . trees now

- SEAN MORAN

Collegian Reporter

If you are thinking about planting a tree for future shade or shelter, now is the best time to plant.

Alan Stevens, associate professor of horticulture, said planting should be done as soon as the ground has unfrozen enough to dig the hole.

"Earlier is better because it allows the tree more time to establish a root system before the heat of the summer," he said.

Although now is the prime time to plant a tree, Stevens said they can still be planted later in the spring.

"You can plant them anytime," he said. "It's just that if you do plant one in the summer, the root system won't have established itself, making watering much more critical. You can't go on vacation and leave the tree."

When buying the tree, it's best to find one with a good, strong trunk, Stevens said. The branches should also be uniformly spread and not all on one side of the tree.

Stevens said trees come in either ball and burlap or container-grown forms. The ball and burlap tree is taken from the ground with a large ball of soil attached and wrapped in burlap. Container-grown trees are just grown in a plastic pot.

When planting trees, it used to be helpful to add organic matter when filling the hole around the tree. According to Stevens, this is no longer sound advice. "We used to say 'Don't put a dol-lar in a nickel hole," Stevens said. "But recent research says you shouldn't add organic matter. Instead of helping the tree, it will result in the tree taking longer to establish a root

A new form of tree, osage orange, is thought to be the best tree to buy, said Stevens. The thornless and fruitless tree adapts well to the soil and the extreme weather in Kansas.

"It was developed at our Wichita resource center," Stevens said. "It works best in rocky hillsides, which Manhattan is built on.'

Kevin Fateley, of Kandscapes Inc., said he agrees the osage orange tree is adaptable to the local environment. However, because it's so new, he hasn't sold any yet.

"Ashes or maples have sold the best," Fateley said, "because their ornamental characterization is suitable for the landscape."

Burglary investigation continues

Suspects speed off with meat, cheese, cargo truck

LAJEAN RAU Staff Reporter

K-State police continue the investigation of a burglary and related auto theft on campus during spring

The police are releasing no new information about the case.

Burglars broke into Pittman Hall about 9:30 p.m. March 12 by prying open a trap door on the roof. They then broke open several storage freezers and loaded $9,000 worth of meat and cheese products into a 1991 cargo-type truck. The truck is valued at about $30,000,

The stolen products were commercial grade steaks, hams and processed cheeses in large packages with brand names not normally found in retail grocery stores, he Pottawatomie County sheriff's officers found the truck at about 2 a.m. following the break-in. The truck was parked on the side of Old St. George Road, three to four miles from U.S. Highway 24, east of Manhattan, Beckom said.

Since most of the goods were returned the morning after the burglary, the inconvenience has not been serious, said Karen Winslow, procurement officer with the services.

"This does cut into our stock," she said. "But, obviously, it can be replaced.

"Most of it was brought back by the police right away," Winslow said. "A federal inspector checked it out to make sure it was still OK."

Damage to the building and facilities was minor. Winslow said only the locks on the freezers were broken, and they have since been repaired.

If Jason Annis had accepted the position, his wife would have been lowered to a temporary position. "When I got my Ph.D, I told the dean of engineering, Ralph Nevins, I was going to go temporary and my wife could keep her regular position," Jason Annis said.

Nevins later discussed the issue with the academic vice president, and it was agreed that the regulation was outdated.

The topic was then brought before the Kansas Board of Regents in 1969-1970 and the rule was changed: Husband and wife could work together in the University as long as they did not work in the same college.

"Everyone just accepted the fact that the woman would have a temporary position, but I saw no reason for my wife to put her career on the back burner," Jason Annis said.

Richard and Marjorie Morse also experienced similar problems. Richard Morse, professor of human development and family studies, had a regular position.

'Cats split with Ichabods, play at home today

DAN WICKER Sports Reporter

Inconsistency both at the plate and in the field added up to a not-sopretty outing for the K-State baseball team Tuesday at Frank Myers Field. The Wildcats played a doubleheader against Washburn University and simply did not come to play as hard as Washburn.

K-State dropped the first game of the twinbill 6-5, but held off a Washburn charge in the seventh to capture the second game 5-4.

K-State coach Mike Clark was quite disgusted with the performance of his ballclub following the second

"I don't think we are a very good ballclub, and we are not playing near our capabilities," Clark said.

In the second game of the afternoon, K-State captured a win for Clark that gave him 138 in his career, to move him into a tie as the winningest skipper in K-State history. However, the win was shaky.

K-State collected nine hits off Washburn pitcher Jeff Johnson, who threw all seven innings, but also committed two errors and a costly balk to almost lose the game in the final inning.

K-State was resting on a 5-2 cushion entering the seventh, but after pitcher Dan Driskill got the lead off hitter to fly out to right, Washburn leftfielder Scott Wagner singled and reached second on Driskill's balk.

Tommy Ashley followed with his second single of the game and went on to second by a throwing error on Craig Wilson that scored Wagner.

Van Torian then committed the second Wildcat error of the inning to put the tying run on base, but Driskill forced the final two batters to ground out and preserve the win.

"We knew pitching-wise we would be a little shy, but I thought Dan (Driskill) competed real well," Clark said. "He made some mistakes early, but after that he got after it. He threw strikes and made the pitches when he had to.'

In the opening game, Washburn coach Steve Anson got his first win over K-State since becoming the head coach. Anson was a K-State graduate and baseball great at K-State in the mid-1970s.

He still stands at the top of many of the K-State career hitting charts. It was also Washburn's first victory over K-State since 1970.

"We have been close three or four times, but we never really pulled it off. It feels good to get one here fi-nally," Anson said. "We needed a boost, and the kids threw well."

Washburn pitcher Brad Foster went all seven innings to get the win, and when it looked as though he might be tiring, he responded by recording four strikeouts in the final two innings.

"You have got to give their pitchers credit. They shut us down. They handled us as well as anybody has all year," Clark said. "We have a couple of days to figure out what is going on before we start Big Eight play."

K-State responded in the third inning to tie the score on a Scott Stroth three-run homer, and got two unearned runs across the plate in their half of the fifth. But when the time came, K-State, which had been batting .329 as a team, failed to get a hit in its final eight trips to the plate.

Washburn also ran all over the bases in the doubleheader. They collected six out of six stolen base attempts in the first game, which was the most any team has recorded on the Wildcats this season. Prior to the Washburn games, K-State catchers had only yielded 10 stolen bases in

'Defensively, we didn't play well. We missed four signs. It is just a perfect example of a team going through the motions instead of getting after it," Clark said. "You have got to give Washburn a lot of credit. They came ready to play."

K-State's Scott Stroth is congratulated by teammates following his homer in the first game of a doubleheader against Washburn Tuesday at Frank Myers Field. Stroth now has four roundtrippers on the year, including three in the last four games. K-State split the twinbill with the 'Bods,

Bama's Wimp set for 'Hogs

By the Associated Press

This first major checkpoint of the NCAA tournament has been a frequent stop for Coach Wimp Sanderson and Alabama, who made it for the sixth time in the last 10 years. The Crimson Tide hasn't won a tournament game beyond that level in any of the previous five trips. "It's not a case of running into a roadblock," Sanderson said. "The more you get up the ladder, the tougher it gets. Next on Alabama's agenda is a date with Arkansas in the Southeast Regional at Charlotte. The other half of that Thursday doubleheader sends Indiana against Kansas. In Thursday's other games, undefeated defending champion UNLV plays Utah, and Seton Hall goes against Arizona in West Regional games at Seattle.

Friday, it will be North Carolina against Eastern Michigan, Oklahoma State against Temple in the East Regional at East Rutherford, N.J., and Ohio State facing St. John's and Connecticut against Duke in the Midwest at Pontiac, Mich.

The Tide has been knocked off by some of the tournament's heavyweights in previous visits to the Sweet 16, including eventual national champion North Carolina in 1982 and Loyola Marymount last Waiting for Wimp is 33-3 Arkansas, ranked No. 2 in the nation, and preparing to move into the SEC next season.

"We'll have a chance to see what it's all about," Coach Nolan Richardson of the Razorbacks said. "We know they are a very good, athletic basketball team.'

Richardson watched Alabama advance against Murray State and Wake Forest and was impressed with the Tide's run and gun game.

"They were a more methodical team when we played them before," he said. "They played a slower style, more of a chess match.'

Big 8 coaches reprimanded

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - One head coach was suspended and four others reprimanded for comments they made about officiating during this year's Big Eight basketball tournament, league Commissioner Carl James said Tuesday.

James suspended Iowa State coach Johnny Orr for the first game of the next basketball season. The disciplinary action was in response to Orr's comments about officiating in the Iowa State-Missouri game March 8 at the Big Eight tournament in Kansas City, the league said.

The coaches receiving reprimands were Kansas coach Roy Williams, Missouri coach Norm Stewart, Colorado coach Joe Harrington and Nebraska coach Danny Nee.

Orr also received a reprimand Feb. 27 for his comments about officiating in the Iowa State-Missouri game three days

The conference wouldn't disclose the coaches' specific comments about officiating.

Under conference regulations, coaches, players and game administrators are not permitted to give public comments about officiating at the games.

'The Big Eight Conduct Code and the National Association of Basketball Coaches Code of Ethics include the principles of honoring all professional relationships with athletes, colleagues, officials, media and the public by basketball coaches," James said in a statement.

These codes request that coaches model common courtesy, fair play and sportsmanship while treating all persons with dignity and respect."

Royals release Stottlemyre

HAINES CITY, Fla. (AP) - The Kansas City Royals gave pitcher Mel Stottlemyre Jr. his unconditional release Tuesday.

Stottlemyre, son of the former New York Yankees pitcher, has been beset by injuries through his career and has had two shoulder operations and five knee surgeries.

"He's just chronic injuries," Manager John Wathan said. "We just didn't know if he could ever pitch effectively."

Designated for reassignment were pitchers Victor Cole, Joel Johnson, Mike Magnante, Carlos Maldonado and Victor Wagner; infielders Sean Berry and Bob Hamelin; outfielder Harvey Pulliam; and catcher Jorge Pedre.

Referee touches off melee

LAS VEGAS (AP) - Richard Steele decided Donovan "Razor" Ruddock could not continue against Mike Tyson in the seventh round Monday night, although Ruddock was on his feet and was not being hit when the fight was stopped.

Steele's decision touched off an outcry from spectators, outrage from members of Ruddock's camp and a brawl in the ring at the end of the fight. Steele ended up on the ring floor being kicked and had to be escorted from the outdoor arena at The Mirage by six security guards.

His controversial action took place one year and a day after his highly criticized decision that Meldrick Taylor could not continue against Julio Cesar Chavez with two seconds left in a fight. Taylor was leading, according to all three official scorecards. "I don't care how many rounds a fight happens to be (Tyson-Ruddock was scheduled for 12), my job is to help a fighter in trouble," Steele said at a news conference.

Royals' release of Jackson brings special era to an end

Wicker

Sports Reporter

We all thought of him as immortal, someone who would be around for years to add spice and flavor to the world of professional sports.

But those dreams and the excitement of watching him play baseball or football may come to a sudden halt because of a hip injury sustained in an NFL playoff game last season with the Los Angeles Raiders.

Bo Jackson was a superstar who could overwhelm a sports fan at any given moment with a towering home-run shot into the water fountains at Royals Stadium, or by bouncing off several would-be tacklers en route to a 98-yard touchdown run. The question was, "What would Bo do next?"

His Nike shoe commericials were a revelation in themselves. Jackson put his talents on display, doing everything from cycling, running and weightlifting to golf and surfing to increase the sales of an all-purpose cross-training shoe.

And when he was told, "Hey, Bo can't surf," Jackson replied, "That's what you think, dudes.'

That quote summarizes his superego - his feeling of being able to do anything he wanted. Hopefully, that ego and a strong inner desire by one of the world's most flamboyant and phenomenal athletes will lead to his comeback in professional sports.

But it will definitely take an extra effort, and probably even a miracle, for the man who had a short run in professional sports, but was obviously the most publicized athlete of the late 1980s.

Jackson's hip has been said to be sufficiently deteriorated to where Kansas City Royals' team physician Steve Joyce believes that Jackson will not be able to play baseball this year or maybe ever again.

But Dr. James Andrews, who examined Jackson in Birmingham, Ala., has said Jackson will be able to return to pro sports in the future and classi-

Well, the loss is definitely one Royals fans and players will have to contend with, and they all know a player such as Bo will not be easy to replace.

In four seasons with Kansas City, Jackson hit 109 home runs with a batting average of .250. But just his presence was enough to get the blood flowing in every Royals fan.

Safire shows talent; asserts energy, drive

REBECCA SACK

Collegian Reviewer

Safire's new album, "I Wasn't Born Yesterday," shows all the spunk of Janet Jackson's "Control," and the funk of Jodi Watley.

Safire may not have been born yesterday, but it is easy to see today in her music. She shows her talent with Latin hip-hop and freestyle

The first two songs on the album, "Made Up My Mind" and "Love's Gotta Be There," set the stage for lyrics and music that assert Safire's energy and drive. These are long songs full of energy, a dance beat and a virtual archetype of 1990s top-40

Safire is a backyard talent with creativity and innovation, but without enough direction to place her securely into a category of distinction.

"I Wasn't Born Yesterday" features hip-hop, house, grand funk, rock, pop, dance and rap music, with elements of even more types of music embedded within each song.

The best hip-hop song, "Taste The begins with jazzy trumpets and ends with a rap by Safire.

The energy of this album cannot be denied, even in the slow jams like, "I Can't Cry." It is easy to feel the power in Safire's voice even in this slower, more emotional song. She sings with a richness that textures what would otherwise be a girlish

From here the album moves on to "I Never Heard," a song by Michael Jackson. The song incorporates funk in the basically pop sound to communicate a slightly more complex lyric about tragic love.

The last song, "I'm A Victim," brings us back to the beginning again with Safire's independence asserted. The song begins with a very strong bass line, characteristic of the bass on the entire album.

Safire gives us her raw talent on an album full of energy, beat and fun. "I Wasn't Born Yesterday" is easy, uncomplicated, corporal music that was made for the dance floor.

Not only is Safire's music characteristic of her era, her appearance is also reminiscent of early Madonna, Downtown Julie Brown, Janet Jackson and even Julia Roberts - when Safire assumes a characteristic pose from the film, "Pretty Woman."

The visual work on the album is even more characteristic of Safire's music than the music, if that is possible. Safire seems to be selling her 90s pop-music image and 90s pop music.

New vet med center dedicated

CINDY BRIGGS Collegian Reporter

President Jon Wefald said the Hill's National Center for Veterinary Practice Management was a superb facility during the dedication-ceremony for the center Tuesday afternoon. The center, located in the renovated fourth floor of Trotter Hall in the Veterinary Medicine complex, is the first facility in the nation with the sole purpose of instructing practice management for veterinary medicine students.

The center consists of a suite of offices, computer lab and Alumni Learning Center.

"If this isn't state of the art, 1'd like to know what is," Wefald said as he glanced around the Alumni Learning Center, a classroom newly refurnished in mauve carpeting and cushioned seats with accents of K-State purple.

Robert Wheeler, president of Hill's Pet Products, said Hill's realized a need for practice management as part of a veterinary medicine curriculum after an increasing partnership with veterinarians showed sound practice management must accompany a veterinarian practice in order to provide good health care.

The idea for a national center began in 1988 when Hill's conducted survey among veterinary colleges in the United States to determine the amount of practice management taught in veterinary curriculums, said Jack Mara, director of veterinary affairs at Hill's.

A meeting in Kansas City later on that year brought together interested faculty members from the veterinary schools who took part in the survey, Mara said.

They set up a model curriculum to serve as a guide to those vet schools interested in establishing a practice management system.

After the meeting, an ad hoc committee was formed to meet periodically throughout the year. Mara said Wheeler attended the first committee meeting and told the group he wanted a national center where faculty could come together.

This facility represents the intuition of a dream that all of us at Hill's have dreamed for a very long

The center will begin operation in the fall of 1991, but for how long depends on its progress. The lifespan expected of the center is nine to 10 years, said Michael Lorenz, dean of the College of Veterinary

He said within the center's lifespan, Hill's has pledged to contribute $1.7 million. Seventy percent of the total amount will be spent during the first five years.

K-State will pick up the funding after five years with an amount comparative to Hill's, and alumni for completion of the center will give $98,000, Lorenz said.

Following the end of the first five years, Lorenz said the center will be reviewed and if progress is evident, the center will continue for another five years.

"As long as the center is making progress and contributions, the lifespan could be indefinite," he

Provost James Coffman said the facility is going along with the idea that education is entering a new

City ban on smoking tabled

Manhattan waits to clear the air in city-owned buildings

DAN SCOTT

Staff Reporter

An ordinance prohibiting smoking in city-owned buildings was tabled by the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday night.

"I think we should see it in writing first and vote on it at the next meet-Commissioner David Fiser

The next meeting is scheduled for p.m. April 2.

Michael Conduff, city manager, said the main hurdle in accepting the final draft of the ordinance is finding a clear definition of a public building.

Under the current draft, a public building is any covered structure that is permanently fixed to the ground, he said. Without mention of walls, the shelter houses at Manhattan City Park would be included in the ordinance. "That seems somewhat overboard," Commissioner Roger Maughmer said.

Adding the word "enclosed" to the present definition would exclude the shelter houses, Klingler said.

Conduff and City Attorney William Frost asked the commission to give examples so they can find a workable definition that covers all intended areas.

Fiser said buildings that are heated or mechanically ventilated should

"It's hard for two very busy people to get away at the same time," Richard DeBowes said.

Richard DeBowes said he doesn't see any problems with married couples working together.

"But it's very important that we be perceived as two different people," he said.

"Every year, the students do a spoof on Richard and I'm always in on it," Linda DeBowes said.

Richard DeBowes said he feels the nepotism policy still has room for improvement.

"There is no program in place to facilitate getting a spouse in if the other one is hired at the University. In other universities, they make a position open for the spouse without a job," he said.

Exemptions, services reviewed by House

By the Associated Press

TOPEKA - The House Taxation Committee continued Tuesday to review proposals to eliminate sales tax exemptions and tax services in hopes of financing a $200-million property tax relief.

Committee members started considering a plan Monday and have so far reviewed only a single part of it - the elimination of sales tax exemptions.

The committee has agreed to include in the plan proposals to raise $51.4 million by eliminating sales tax exemptions.

It would eliminate exemptions for new farm machinery, manufacturing equipment and machinery, coin-operated laundry services, as well as several other Members are working from a subcommittee's proposals to raise $185.2 million from taxing services and eliminating sales tax exemptions.

They have voted to preserve exemptions worth $95.3 million, including ones for used farm machinery, residential utility bills and repair services for railroad

Danker talks on Wounded Knee

Former professor's lecture based on interviews with survivors

ULRIKE DAUER

Collegian Reporter

More than 100 survivors of the massacre of Wounded Knee, in which 300 Native Americans were killed, will have their stories told tonight.

Donald Danker, emeritus professor of history at Washburn University, said interviews with the survivors are the basis for the lecture he will present at 7 tonight in Union

He will discuss what happened in the winter of 1890, when U.S. soldiers attacked an Indian camp in Wounded Knee, S.D.

Danker said the interviews were carried out by Eli Ricker, then editor of the Chadron Times, a weekly paper in Chadron, Neb., a town close to Wounded Knee.

In two decades following the massacre, Ricker interviewed Native Americans and white soldiers and civilians, who had observed or participated in the event. Ricker never published the interviews, but he left more than 100 tablets filled with notes when he died. As a member of the Nebraska State Historical Society, Danker had access to the notes, he said.

Danker said he has evaluated the interviews since he became a history professor at Washburn in 1967, and they were finally published in a book

He said he believes this last real battle in the Indian wars about 100 years ago is an episode of considerable controversy.

"It is clouded by prejudices on both sides of the picture," he said. "The true story is in between."

Danker said he first became interested in Native American history in 1952. After receiving a doctorate in American history, he worked for the Nebraska State Historical Society where he discovered the diaries of Frank North, a white man who had lived near a Pawnee reservation.

North worked on the reservation and learned the Pawnee language. Several articles and a book about North resulted from this research.

Danker is member of the Kansas State Committee for the Humanities, which sponsored the lecture for Native American Heritage Month.

Iraqi warplane breaks silence, U.S. retaliates

By the Associated Press

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia - The United States vividly demonstrated its dominance over Iraq's airspace Wednesday by shooting down an Iraqi warplane, that took flight in violation of the Persian Gulf War cease-

It was the first air engagement since fighting stopped three weeks ago after the U.S.-led coalition drove the defeated Iraqi army from Kuwait, and came as Saddam Hussein's forces tried to suppress Kurdish and Shiite Muslim insurgencies.

Wednesday, Iraq accused Iran of inciting the uprisings. Iran has denied involvement, although its president has urged Saddam to resign.

Iran and Saudi Arabia, Iraq's neighbors and the largest Persian Gulf states, said Wednesday they were restoring diplomatic relations after a three-year rift.

Tehran, which has been moving to mend relations with Arab states, also reopened its embassy in Amman, Jordan.

The U.S. Central Command said an Air Force F-15C shot down the Iraqi Su-22 jet fighter over Tikrit, Saddam's hometown. The fate of the Iraqi pilot was not known.

President Bush said U.S. forces will not hesitate to shoot down any other Iraqi planes that fly, but said: "I don't think that will happen.'

"We're not resuming hostilities. We're not re-engaging," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said. "We're simply proceeding with the cease-fire as we outlined it to the

The air engagement occurred less than 100 miles from Kirkuk, a key northern city Kurdish rebels said was being bombarded by Iraqi aircraft Wednesday. Such rebel claims could not be verified independently. The United States has told Iraq to use its warplanes against the insurgents. It was not known whether the Su-22 shot down was moving against rebel positions.

It was the first time Iraqi fixedwing combat aircraft have flown since the cease-fire, said Lt. Col. Virginia Pribyla, a Central Command spokeswoman in Riyadh, the Saudi capital.

A second Iraqi warplane landed on its own after the engagement, the Central Command reported.

The F-15C that shot down the Iraqi jet was one of two sent by an AWACS radar plane to visually identify the Iraqi Su-22s before engaging them.

The Iraqi attempt to fly these two fighter aircraft is a violation of terms agreed with Iraqi military officials during military-to-military talks at Safwan, Iraq, March 3," the Central Command said.

Pribyla would not say what fighter wing or unit the F15s belonged to.

She said the United States has been flying combat air patrols over Iraq since the cease-fire began, but refused to say how many planes were involved or what weapons they

In a second round of cease-fire talks Sunday, allied military commanders warned Iraqi commanders not to move their warplanes for any U.S. Maj. Gen. Robert Johnston told the Iraqis using warplanes would be a clear violation of the temporary cease-fire conditions established at initial cease-fire talks by Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, U.S. commander in the gulf.

"Schwarzkopf said during the cease-fire discussions they could not fly fixed-wing aircraft. They did. We shot it down," Fitzwater said.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III said the U.S. stance has a collateral effect of hindering Baghdad from fighting the rebels. Baker said the United States' intent was not to help topple Saddam's government.

Kurdish rebel leader Jalal Talabani said Iraqi government troops used helicopters and warplanes to drop napalm and incendiary bombs on the northern cities of Karahanzeer and Shamshamal.

Another rebel spokesman, Hoshyar Zebari, said Wednesday in London that Iraqi helicopters and aircraft were bombarding Kirkuk, causing hundreds of casualties.

Kurdish guerrillas claimed they had taken control of the city, despite the Iraqi air attack, driving out the last army defenders in intensive street fighting.

Investigation of local gas prices continues

Collegian Reporter

The Kansas attorney general's office is continuing its investigation into possible collusion among local gas stations for high gas prices last August.

Mary Horsch, press secretary for the attorney general's office, said the attorney general's office has not come to a conclusion in the investigation yet.

"We are still getting information and looking into it until we get enough evidence to prosecute," she said. "It's difficult to prove stations were in collusion with each other."

Ten stations in Manhattan were selected at random to have records subpoened, but evidence has not been found that incriminates the stations, Horsch said.

The investigation began last Aug. 23, when at least 10 Manhattan area gas stations raised their prices on the same day. The day after the investigation began, the

She said evidence of collusion among the gas stations could constitute certain anti-trust violations against the restriction of trade. There could also be a possible violation of the Kansas Consumer Protection Act, although she said she wasn't sure where it would fall within the act.

Horsch said for each violation of the Kansas Consumer Protection Act, a $2,000 fine can be imposed.

Manhattan was the only city in the state to be investigated after several residents made complaints about higher-thannormal gas prices, she said.

Bud Crabtree, manager of Griffith Oil, which supplies stations in Junction City and Manhattan, said Manhattan is a free

"The stations have to make a living and are free to price as they choose," he said. Political considerations and the national attention to spiraling gas prices were motivations for the attorney gengas stations dropped prices, Horsch said. eral's investigation, he said.

Fee changes need Student Senate OK

Increase requests to be reviewed

CINDY BRIGGS

K-State students will see an increase in student fees next fall if the Student Senate approves requested increases during the next

On the Senate's agenda tonight is the first reading of a number of fee-increase requests. Senate has until March 29 to send all feeincrease requests passed by the Senate to the Kansas Board of Regents for the final

See related story/Page 12

Because of the number of requests for fee increases this year, and the short amount of time to deliberate on them, Senate will have an additional session for second readings of the request for Recreational Services and Student Publications Tuesday. The rest will be heard at the regular meeting March 28. Recreational Services is asking to consolidate its recreational building program fee with its recreational services fee in addition to an overall increase.

Student Affairs and Social Services Chairperson Brooke Jones, junior in journalism and mass communications, said Student Publications Inc. is asking to increase its line-item fee and to establish an equipment fee to be used for purchasing a computer system and maintaining equipment. This fee will amount to $3.90 per semester for full-time students and $1.95 per semester for part-time

"The equipment fee won't be able to be used for anything else," she said.

Jones said her committee is proposing Senate Ioan Student Publications $500,000, to be paid back in five years. She said the equipment fee will be used to retire the loan.

Also on the agenda for first readings is a proposal to increase the K-State Union fee by $5 for operation costs and by $1.75 for repair

$16 million may be restored to budget

RYAN HAYTER

Collegian Reporter

After weeks of bad news from the current Kansas Legislative session, K-State received good news Wednesday.

In a first round of voting, the Kansas House of Representatives passed an amendment to the general appropriations bill restoring $16 million in budget cuts to the Kansas Board of Regents.

Representatives approved the amendment by a vote 69 to 52 in the general-order preli-

If passed by a final vote in the House today, the measure will then go to the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

The amendment would nullify a bill proposed by the Appropriation Committee, which asked for a 1-percent base cut and a .05-percent cut in the salary shrinkage fee at all regents institutions.

The Appropriation Committee proposal was one of many budget reducing plans introduced as the Legislature tried to deal with the state's financial situation.

Provost James Coffman said the proposed cuts would have hit K-State especially hard. K-State would have lost $6.5 million in the proposal, including a $1.9-million cut in enrollment adjustment money.

"The cuts as prescribed by the Appropriation Committee would have had a serious effect at K-State due to our enrollment increase," he said.

All regents schools will benefit from the restoration proportionally, Coffman said. Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said the passage of the amendment was a solid achievement for the regents.

"The amendment was passed in an atmosphere of extreme budget crisis," he said.

The effort was pushed through by a bipartisan coalition of representatives, including Glasscock and Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan.

The regents staff, along with a delegation from regents institutions, drafted the amendment.

K-State would receive a $4.6-million share of the restoration money. The revenue would be distributed to the following areas:

 $1.9 million would go toward enrollment adjustment.

$1.054 million to base budget restorations. $67,000 to student wages.

$75,000 to graduate teaching assistant

■ $680,000 to operating expenses. The measure would increase student wages by 16 percent and operational expenses by 4 percent. Enrollment adjustments and GTA waivers would be fully restored.

Gorbachev orders price increases

MOSCOW (AP) — In an effort to bolster the crippled Soviet economy, President Mikhail Gorbachev Tuesday ordered price increases next month on many foods and consumer goods. An official said some prices would rise tenfold.

Prices for about half of all consumer products will be lifted, the head of the Soviet price committee said. Some of the items have remained at the same price since the 1960s.

In his decree Tuesday, Gorbachev ordered the long-dreaded price hikes to take effect April 2, the official news agency Tass reported. Transportation and communications prices also will rise, Tass said.

Mother's death goes unnoticed

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Two girls are meals of cookies and kept going to school for eight days after their mother died at home, police said.

Police found the decomposing body of the 31-year-old mother Monday in the bedroom of their suburban Sydney home, alerted by calls from school and community health officials.

Eric Clapton's son killed in fall

NEW YORK (AP) — The 5-year-old son of rock guitarist Eric Clapton died Wednesday after he fell out the window of a 53rd-floor apartment, police said.

Conor Clapton fell shortly after 11 a.m. and landed on the roof of a four-story building next door, said Officer Kim Royster.

The boy's mother, Italian TV star Lory Del Santo, and a housekeeper were in the apartment when he fell, Royster said.

The housekeeper had just finished cleaning the window pane and had left it open to air out the room when Conor ran past him and fell out the 4-by-6 foot window, police said.

Specifically, they are upset about censored reports from inside Iraq during the hostilities.

KU questions homosexual policy

LAWRENCE (AP) — The University of Kansas is trying to persuade the U.S. Department of Defense to change its policy on homosexuals serving in the military, including university Reserve Officer Training Corps programs, school officials said.

The Defense Department asserts homosexuality is incompatible with military service and excludes gays and lesbians from military service, including in ROTC programs.

"Basically, I think there's general support for the ROTC as a viable program, as long as it does not discriminate," said Frances Ingernann, chairwoman of the KU senate executive committee.

Zoo's owl to appear on NBC show

MANHATTAN — The Manhattan Sunset Zoo will be showing off its snowy owl, Cascade, at 8 a.m. Friday on NBC's Today Show.

The female owl, one of only a few in the world that are glove trained, will be highlighted with Jim Fowler from Mutual of Omaha's Wild Kingdom.

Angela Baier, marketing/development officer for Sunset Zoo, said Fowler will be giving a feature presentation on animals of the arctic.

"It's so rare to have a snowy owl that can be handled," she said.

"This is the first time Sunset Zoo has been on the Today Show," she said. "We have had animals on the Johnny Carson and the Merv Griffin shows."

"She has appeared in front of schoolchildren, but this is the first time she'll make a national appearance," Baier said.

Yale math professor to lecture

Serge Lang, a mathematics professor at Yale University, will lecture at 2:30 today in Cardwell 102.

The Department of Mathematics is sponsoring the fifth annual Harry Valentine Lecture. Valentine's interests included the economic development of Kansas through enhancement of basic and applied science.

Lang will present a case study of political opinions passed off as science and mathematics. The study is based on concrete examples that show how words stemming from mathematics are used to mislead, confuse and intimidate people.

"Lang gets into something, and throws himself into it wholeheartedly," said Andy Bennett, assistant professor in mathematics. "He writes very quickly. He is very politically active."

Landon Lecture to feature Bradley

MANHATTAN (AP) — Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., will deliver a Landon Lecture at K-State April 15.

Bradley, the senior senator from New Jersey, is in his third term. He has been called the prime architect of the 1986 taxreform code, which closed tax loopholes and took millions of poor people off the tax rolls.

Bradley played professional basketball for the New York Knickerbockers for 10 years before entering politics.

Another Landon Lecture is scheduled for next month — former President Jimmy Carter April 26.

Law professor to speak at Farrell

The fourth annual Consumer Movement Archives public lecture will be at 7:30 p.m. today in Room 4 of Farrell Library.

Norman Silber, associate professor of law at Hofstra University, will lecture about "Legal and Historical Perspectives of the Consumer Movement."

His lecture will be followed by the dedication of the University Archives and Special Collections Research Room, the fifth floor of Farrell.

In ancient Egypt, they wrapped bodies in cloth to preserve them. In Aggieville today, Crimpers Hair Design Studio wraps customers in Ace bandages to help them lose

The new service, called bodywrapping, is a process of wrapping the customer's entire body in bandages that have been soaked in an aloe vera and herb solution.

They then sit for 45 minutes with blankets wrapped around them, said Cheryl Sjodahl, manager of Crimpers.

The aloe vera is good for the skin. It penetrates through the pores and does a toxin cleansing by loosening up fatty deposits and cellulite. The toxins then dissolve into the lymph

"After the bodywrap, the customer should drink a gallon of water to flush out the fatty deposits," Sjo-dahl said.

"The pores warm up when you apply the bandages and then open up so the solution can penetrate and break down the fatty deposits," said Wida Davies, esthetician at Crimpers.

"Before we do the bodywrap, we measure and mark the person around the legs, torso and arms," she said. "Then when it is finished, we remeasure the same areas and you can see a definite inch loss.'

"Inch loss can average anywhere from 3 to 18 inches," Sjodahl said.

"Everyone's different, it depends on the person and how long fatty deposits have been there. The longer it's been there, the harder it is to get rid of," she said.

The process takes about 1 hour and 30 minutes.

"I was skeptical at first, but now I do think it works," Davies said. "If

On-campus chalking regulations may be lifted

LAJEAN RAU Staff Reporter

Regulations for chalking on campus sidewalks have been clarified by University Activities Board, pending approval by Student Senate.

Advance permission from University Facilities to post or chalk on campus is no longer required. Registration is still required for banner Increased interest in recent years and several incidents this semester raised awareness of the right to chalk and questions about where it could be done and who should regulate it. Students also said it takes too much effort and paperwork to get permission to post and chalk.

At a UAB meeting Wednesday afternoon, board members made final revisions on publicity regulations, dealing with posting signs, hanging banners, distributing literature and a new category as of this year sidewalk publicity.

A group of concerned students attended UAB's Feb. 27 meeting to speak out in favor of sidewalk chalking. The board decided the publicity regulations were insufficient as they stood and promised to do further research, taking into account some of the suggestions and ideas from the Most of the confusion centered around whether or not individuals or unregistered groups could chalk on campus, and where, if at all, chalking was permitted. Several board members and students said they wondered if UAB should regulate individual expression.

Revisions were presented the following week and again this week. Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities, consulted Dorothy Thompson, University attorney.

'We decided UAB should be the one to regulate this because the board has students on it," Routson said. "The other option, University Facilities, does not. Also, the way the policy stood we did regulate individuals who were distributing literature."

Routson said they decided to make a distinct section in the policy for individuals and unregistered groups. Another justification for regulation of these groups is UAB can decide how people communicate or advertise on campus by controlling time, place and manner, without violating rights to free speech, she said.

"We did want to allow individual expression, of course. We just wanted to find the best way to do it,"

The next step is for the revised policy to go to Senate.

Population debated in forum

LORI STAUFFER Staff Reporter

Candidates for the Manhattan City Commission debated the effects of population growth on the environment and the Commission's role in controlling those effects.

The forum was sponsored by the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society Wednesday night in Ackert

Growth in population does not have to be viewed as an adverse problem to the environment, candidate Helen Cooper said.

"I think Manhattan is very fortunate to be in an area with adequate water, land and resources that is able to accommodate some additional growth in population," Cooper said. "I'm not saying that we should create a metropolis of a million people.

"But, I think in an orderly way we can accommodate additional people, and I don't believe it will jeapordize Manhattan or the environment. I think it can be done so that both will survive.

Cooper also said that in order to maintain the quality of life Manhattan supports with arts and recreation, there has to be a certain population mass to support it.

Candidate Jim Dubois said growth does not need to degradate the environment if handled

Dubois said the area east of the K-State campus demonstrated how the Commission has handled growth in the past and how it should be handled in the future.

"There used to be fine homes in the area, and as the University began to grow and increase in the number of students, the solution was to allow spot zoning to occur," Dubois said. "Twelveplexes were built in an area that was never intended or designed for those units to be built because of the streets, waste treatment systems and the water systems. Those were poor decisions years ago that are still here with us

Dubois said there are a number of ways that development can take ■ See FORUM, Page 12

Beating videotape shows violent America

"All violent feelings ... produce in us a fal- lent crime in 1990 at a rate of 400 crimes per seness in all our impressions of external as the 'Pathetic Fallacy.'" John Ruskin (1819-1900), English art critic and sociological writer.

he Senate Judiciary Committee reported last week that the United States is "the most violent and selfdestructive nation on Earth." Of the nations of the world that keep statistics on violent crime, America has the distinction of holding world records for the year 1990 in the violent crime categories of murder, rape, assault and robbery — more than 1.8 million Americans were victims. If this were the Olympics, we would be a nation of goldmedal killers, rapists, bushwackers and thieves. We are indeed a violent society.

According to the committee's report, in 1990 there were at least 23,300 killings more than twice that of war-torn Northern Ireland; four times that of Italy; nine times that of England; and 11 times that of Japan.

The report cites that in 1990, robbery rates in the United States were six times more than in England, seven times more than in Italy and about 150 times more than in Japan. Similarly, in 1990, the rape rate in the United States was eight times more than in France, 15 times more than in England, 23 times more than in Italy and 26 times more than in Japan.

Closer to home, Kansans experienced vio-

100,000 population, which is an overall inthings, which I would generally characterize crease of 11.4 percent from 1989 to 1990, according to the Kansas Bureau of Investigation.

Closer still, residents of Manhattan experienced a 7.9 percent increase in crime from 1989 to 1990.

Also, the FBI reports that in 1989 there were 18,954 deaths as a result of the use of some sort of weapon - 62 percent of which were due to firearms. Furthermore, 76 percent of the firearms used as murder weapons were handguns.

One can certainly understand then, in light of even a cursory review of some simple crime statistics, the kind of job-related stress police officers across the nation are experiencing. They are faced with the daily task of confronting a monstrously violent criminal element that possesses, in many cases, an overwhelming amount of deadly firepower. And in all instances, the officer is required to use minimum force to subdue or remove a suspect who poses a threat to life or property.

A Herculean task if ever there was one. This explains why many people are sympathetic toward policemen when a few unsavory characters in a city like Los Angeles, where drug-related killings, gang wars and drive-by shootings are a common occurrence, are cracked over the head every now and then by jumpy, stressed-out policemen with nightsticks.

It all certainly made some kind of sense to

Brad Seabourn Collegian Columnist

America's gurus in charge of the so-called "War on Crime." President Bush said we must be doing something right, because we are winning the crime war. Why, it made sense to everyone - until March 3.

At 12:45 a.m. March 3, Rodney King and a ideotape changed all that.

King, a black, 25 year-old unemployed construction worker with two children, who had recently served six months of a two-year sentence for second-degree robbery, was stomped, kicked and beaten with night sticks for more than two minutes by three Los Angeles Police Department officers as a fourth applied electric shock from a Taser gun to King's chest. Nine other lawenforcement officers (not all LAPD) looked

King suffered nine skull fractures, a shattered eye socket and cheekbone, a broken leg, a concussion, injuries to both knees and nerve damage that left his face partially paralyzed. Charges of police brutality and racism have been filed by King, and four officers involved were indicted.

I doubt by now that anyone in the United States has not seen the vidoetaped beating of King, which was provided by one of several dozen eyewitnesses to the incident. Unlike the 15 officers at the scene, an entire nation was shocked at the appalling disregard for human life (in the finest tradition of Saddam Hussein) displayed by these members of a highly respected fraternity of civil servants.

Like many people, I watched in disbelief and wondered what heinous thing this man had done to provoke these highly trained and trusted men to administer such a horrible beating. I really don't want to describe the violent acts I unfairly suspected of King. Such was my trust of law enforcement officials.

Controversy surrounding the incident, and conflicting information among the officers involved and local residents who were eyewitnesses to the beating, have already arisen.

Apparently in 1990, the city of Los Angeles paid an estimated $8 million as a result of excessive-force lawsuits filed against the police department, of which Police Chief Daryl Gates is in charge. However, the department alleges the number of incidents of brutality is miniscule.

Officers on the scene said King tried to elude police in a high-speed chase. But then, there is the videotape.

Officers said he tried to stand up while being handcuffed, causing one officer to fall. But then, there is the videotape.

Officers said he reached into his pants pocket, causing some officers to think he may have been attempting to withdraw a weapon. But then, there is the videotape.

Regardless of the events that prompted the police to pursue King, regardless of the actions or mannerisms that suggested to the officers physical violence was necessary, the videotape clearly shows a defenseless, subdued and submissive suspect being struck more than 50 times.

There can be no question in anyone's mind concerning police brutality. But what of the charges of racism?

ot all of the information surrounding the beating of King has been analyzed or made available to the public yet. Recently, an audiotape of conversation between officers at the scene and the department dispatcher was released to the public. It contained evidence of racial slurs and a callous disregard for the human Chief Gates said the King incident is simply an "aberration." This assessment comes from a man who in 1982 asserted that several blacks died as a result of police chokeholds because arteries in the necks of blacks "do not open up as fast as they do in

But then, Chief Gates, there is the

LAPD brings focus back home

With coordinated assaults, high-tech weapons and overwhelming numbers, the uniformed defenders of law and order crushed their opponent, who, in the videotapes and photographs, is raising his hands in surrender.

An accurate description of Operation Desert Storm? Yes.

An accurate description of the beating of black motorist Rodney King by white officers of the Los Angeles Police Department?

Again, yes.

We praise those men and women who did their duty in the Persian Gulf War as heroes. We honor those who died serving their country. It is right that we do so.

And we are repulsed by the amateur videotape of four police officers beating a man prone on the street with night sticks, kicks and a Taser gun. That reaction is equally correct.

While the people of Los Angeles wrestle with the revelation that their police force may not measure up to the image created by Jack Webb in "Dragnet," the nation as a whole must seek to rectify the images born of a just foreign war and domestic injustice.

And finding the means to explain both events as products of America will be difficult.

Operation Desert Storm seems to typify the best in Americans. Motivated by a unique sense of justice, the United States organized and led an international coalition to end the occupation of Kuwait by Iraq's brutal dictatorship. It sent the young members of the most racially-integrated institution in America to fight and die for the self-determination of another people.

The beating of King by officers of a police department that is said to tacitly approve of brutality toward minorities seems impossible in a nation in which the highest-ranking military officer is a black man.

Yet the proof is shown repeatedly night and day on

Maybe the United States can stand tall because of its victory in Operation Desert Storm. But America cannot measure up to its own self-image as long as a racially-motivated police beating is surprising only because the officers were videotaped in the Perhaps we look for external enemies to prove ourselves against because we cannot face the evil within ourselves.

Letter from Baghdad tells much do not want to worry you by my letter, but now I have a good chance maybe the last chance - to get it out of the country, now that our common friend Mohammed is leaving for Amman. I know you are worrying and thinking of Iraq, though I presume you know more than we do about the events of the war on both sides. However, you surely know nothing about what an ordinary resident of Baghdad is experiencing at this time.

I have sent Amal and the children north, but I can get no contact with them because the telephones are not working. I hope they are safer there than here in Baghdad. Life here is confused and dangerous; one never knows what will happen next. Bomber planes fly over us even now. The sirens are wailing unceasingly. Wild dogs bark hysterically at them. The dogs are not getting used to the sirens and are still afraid. I have seen them bite people running away in fright. Is this turning into the daily life one must get used to? In the last war, few Iranian bombs hit Baghdad. Now there are flying and exploding things all above and around us. Nevertheless, on the radio it is said the damages are not great, there are not many dead and nothing is hit. However, we hear explosions, and we see fires, ruins and blood.

The news I tell you is all bad except for one thing. I cannot find joy even in that one at this moment. I will tell it first. Amal (my wife) is pregnant. The calculated time for our eighth child is in July. We hope, inshallah, God willing, that it is allowed to be born in peacetime.

Last night we had guests. Several soldiers burst inside with a great noise. The said they were looking for Tareq, our oldest son who, they said, had deserted his military base. I know nothing about the boy. Naturally, he is afraid to come home, because he is sure our house is being watched. I was told that if I cannot get him back on the front, I should send his brother, the 17-year-old Omar, in his place. I said Omar is not at home, and that I did not know exactly where he was. They promised to return in a couple of days. I had better be home and have a replacement for Tareq.

I am glad my family is away. I am almost glad for Tareq. I expected him to desert. He never wanted to go to war, likewise with many of his friends. There are thought to be

Guest Column

The following guest column is a translation from a letter published in Suomen Kuvalehti, a reputable Finnish weekly magazine, on February 15, 1991. This is an exerpt from a letter written by an educated Iraqi man, the father of seven children, who remained in Baghdad during the Allied attack. It was first brought to Amman, the capital of Jordan, in two parts, and then mailed from there to the Finnish friend of the Iraqi man. The names of the people mentioned in the letter have been changed or omitted by the magazine for security reasons. The letter was then sent to a K-State student via a computer networking system.

about 100,000 deserters. The thought he is hiding somewhere, that he is cold and hungry, is almost driving me mad. I cannot help Neither can I help your Kurd friend, Faiq, who was taken away a couple of days ago. His family asked me to inquire about his disappearance, and through my many convolutions (because of my own past and my own disappearances I cannot inquire myself, and had put my friends to work) I have found he is in a prison near Baghdad with many other Kurds. They are being charged with activities against the state: planning their own Kurd state — the punishment for which can be

I would like to write to you about other, easier things, but there are none at the moment. We try to live in the middle of all this; the shops are sometimes open, we cook if we can and drink when we can get water. We even laugh and tell jokes to each other. Now and then I visit my workplace, but nothing much is happening there. The offices are open irregularly and the schools are closed. Everyone wants to be at home and with family, if one's family is still in the city. Unconfirmed rumors tell about thousands of dead and injured, but no one knows anything for certain.

I also have to tell you about Hamida, the little daughter of my friend, for whom you drew those princesses and the picture of your dog. Did you know that she eagerly studied English and was saving money to come and see that dog of yours that lived inside with you and whom no one was allowed to kick?

You surely know that water distribution in the city is not functioning properly. We only get water for a small period each day and cannot use it for washing. Hamida felt dirty and got the idea of washing herself and her little brother in the Tigris. At the same time, they drank the water because of their thirst. Nothing happened to her brother, but Hamida got a bad cold and got bacteria from the dirty water, so she is unable to keep food inside. In the hospital there are no antibiotics that could cure her. Even if there are, they are being saved for the soldiers. They wish that small girls like Hamida will get better without medicine and with God's help. Nevertheless, she is already a shadow of her former self. Dear friend, tell, is our country accursed? Why are some countries called holy and promised, and they can do anything, while some others are under a perpetual curse? There is no peace nor justice for them, and all their attempts to go foward fail.

I do not know what you people are told about our lives, I do not know if you are even interested in it. We have a feeling here that we are living in a bag with a small hole, and through that hole is pushed the information that is thought to be needed in the bag. Those who know English listen to BBC. The Arabian broadcasts of Radio Monte Carlo are popular. They tell of different things than our own papers and radio. We have no electricity, except at random intervals, so those who own battery-operated radios are in a luckier position, as long as the batteries last.

Television, when it works, shows demonstrations, in which the whole world is marching and demonstrating for us. They tell that even in Europe and America people think of Saddam Hussein as a great hero, whom only, the governments hate. Many believe in that, We are promised that we will win the war! We listen to hours of explanations of why America has no chances of winning.

y friend, you see that I try to talk objectively about the matters of my country. You know what I think myself; on which side I will act for as long as I can. My heart bleeds for my son. It already bleeds for things that have not yet happened, but seem to be ahead for the whole of the nation.

I hope you are well yourself.

Another perspective

The time to strike is now, while the iron is hot.

U.S.-Soviet relations have never been more ripe for cooperation in finding a solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict that has plagued the Middle East since 1947, when Israel was recognized as a nation.

The United States and the Soviet Union have been greatly responsible for furthering tensions between the two groups by supplying arms that have kept the war fires burning.

In the end, Israel will likely have to return the West Bank and Gaza Strip to the Palestinians if an Arab-Israeli peace is to be reached. However, we do realize that this will take years of careful negotiations to ensure the needs of both sides are met.

But if there was ever an era of good feeling in the Middle East, it is now. The Persian Gulf War united a number of Arab countries - and to some extent Israel - in a common goal.

Now that the Middle East is enjoying a time of relative peace, a reduction of Arab-Israeli tensions looks more promising than ever.

Universities lack minorities

Kansas colleges try to increase numbers

LORI STAUFFER Staff Reporter

Universities may have to file a missing persons report for minority students.

The number of minority students on college campuses are so small at Kansas Board of Regents schools, all but Wichita State University have less than 10 percent of on-campus populations consisting of minority

Kansas universities are trying to pay more than lip-service to minority students and most are actively working toward increasing the number of minority students on campuses.

The University of Kansas is undergoing some changes in philosophy to encourage the recruitment and retention of minority students, said Sherwood Thompson, the new director of the office of minority affairs at KU.

"We are re-establishing and reevaluating the objectives of the office of minority affairs. We would certainly like to increase the number of minority students who attend our institution," Thompson said.

One of the goals KU is looking toward is assuring minority student academic success.

"We try to identify and isolate the number of students who are academically at risk," he said. "We provide them a list of available assistance to use, whether it be in tutors, academic counsel or academic support systems such as peer counseling."

Emporia State University is suffering a greater deficiency with only a 4 percent minority population that includes blacks, Native Americans, Hispanics and Asian-Americans. The university's total non-white population of American minority and international students just meets the minority percentage at the five other regents schools.

Emporia State does provide a support system for the minority students in making a transition from high schools and the community colleges to the university, said William King, Emporia State director of minority affairs.

One program at Emporia State is Students Assisting Students, in which incoming minority students are paired with upperclassmen for one semester.

King said the peer assistance helps in the transition and can provide the how-to knowledge only students who have been through the system would know.

'We try to combine academics with the social and organizational," King said. "We are concerned about the students and their experience here. We want them to stay in school and be successful.'

Mordean Taylor-Archer, K-State assistant provost for multicultural affairs, said she has been concerned about minority retention here and that she believes retention is the most important aspect of minorities on

'We want to make sure students do not fall between the cracks. It is important that they feel a part of the campus," she said. Academic support is a large part of keeping minority students at K-State, Taylor-Archer said.

Also, by increasing the number of minority instructors, students can find role models that may provide them the aid they need in classes, which in turn may give the incentive to stay here, she said.

"We want to see a building of a community for the minority students and give them a sense of belonging," Taylor-Archer said.

Pittsburg State University is sporting a 2 percent increase in its minority enrollment from last year after the administrators established a goal for the year to increase minority enrollment, said Teresa Massa, PSU director of equal opportunity and affirmative action.

'We are emphasizing one-to-one contact with the students in recruitment and we're trying to reach out in different modes. Letters alone just do not work. We have found that the personal touch is more successful," Massa said.

Financial considerations have also become a concern for minority students attending PSU, as well as many of the other schools in the state,

She said many students think because it may be difficult to receive financial aid with the budget crunch occurring in the state, they don't even

"They have heard that financial aid is tight. We tell them to go ahead and apply, to fill out the financial aid report. They just won't know if they can get the money until they fill out the form and apply."

Massa said minorities on college campuses have become the fact of the future and that all universities will have to actively encourage recruitment and retention at each institution.

'We need to be prepared for it. The demographics are changing rapidly,'

Group reflects world in 'kitcheny' music

REBECCA SACK

Collegian Reviewer

Kitchens of Distinction's new album, "Strange Free World," was named after some fan mail the group received from a Japanese girl who said she felt that "her soul floated close to the ocean that took her to a strange free world."

This world seems to be more kitcheny than distinctive for the Kitchens.

The Kitchens create music that doesn't solve anything. They pile questions upon questions with multi-layered guitars and disturbing, but controlled, distortion.

The group's music is a sort of sensitive noise, with all the influence of the 1960s and the punk revolution, but without the violence.

The music seems to transcend the reality of the lyrics, which seem to be centered on common human experiences. Most songs deal with either fear or love, or transcending either.

The song "Gorgeous Love" speaks of, "open noisy big brilliant love," and the singer's fear of, "everything that's not you."

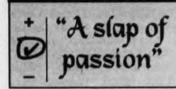

All of this emotion, however, is brought back into perspective in a most convenient and prevalent way - sleep. Other songs speak about memory, nature, nicotine or alcohol being used to transcend human passions.

The song, "Within the Daze of Passion," creates an ironic, driving melancholy to express well the sort of double world discussed in the lyrics. The music seems to blend the worlds of reality and emotion. Guitars create melodic patterns which can only be described as stream-ofconsciousness.

Although the idea is understandable, the feeling of it is more of the point. The song talks about being on the, "edge of the world," but the music takes us in between the two worlds the rest of the album has so easily depicted.

Reviewer says ...

Singer-bassist Patrick Fitzgerald keeps the Kitchens in a more real place with his plain vocals, while guitarist Julian Swales and drummer Dan Goodwin explain the sort of higher reality they find in the music.

The Kitchens say things that have been said before and create sounds less distinctive than their name would suggest. The vague familiarity of their music is a tribute to their understanding of the human condition, but there just isn't any epic talent or exciting innovation on this album.

It's nice like home is nice. Maybe this is because a kitchen can be as distinctive as possible but it is still just a kitchen.

'Cats explode for 39 runs in sweep

Hit parade vs. Griffons ends offensive troubles

JENIFER SCHEIBLER

Sports Reporter

It was raining hits at Frank Myers Field yesterday, and it was exactly the forecast Wildcat baseball coach Mike Clark wanted.

Offense was not lacking in K-State's doubleheader sweep of Missouri Western.

The Wildcats collected 35 hits en route to scoring 39 runs over the course of the two games.

The first game saw the Griffons jump out to a 7-0 lead before the Wildcat offense erupted for a 15-run third inning.

Eighteen at-bats were taken by the Wildcats in the inning, and seven batters rounded the bases twice.

Clark's call for more offense was being answered.

'We became disciplined and hit the ball," he said. "Everybody up and down the lineup did their job." The offensive show was sparked by several Wildcat hitters. Craig Wilson finished the game with five RBIs, including two homers. Brad Rippelmeyer and Lance Wilson each hit the ball out of the park once while garnering four and three RBIs respectively. Lance Wilson went on to finish the day at 6-for-7 from the plate.

Righthander Pat Boyle, 1-0, saw his first action of the season and

"Credit goes to assistant coaches and players," he said. "This has been the best five years of K-State baseball ever, but hopefully, the best is yet to come.'

In the nightcap, the Wildcats continued the offensive assault and sent the Griffons home with a 21-11 loss.

Again several Wildcats were active in putting the bat on the ball, and K-State led the game 7-2 by the third

The Griffons regrouped and tied the game at seven in their half of the fourth inning on a three-run homer by third baseman Mike Hensley.

K-State came back to score five runs on four hits to go up 15-7. From that point on, the Wildcats never looked back.

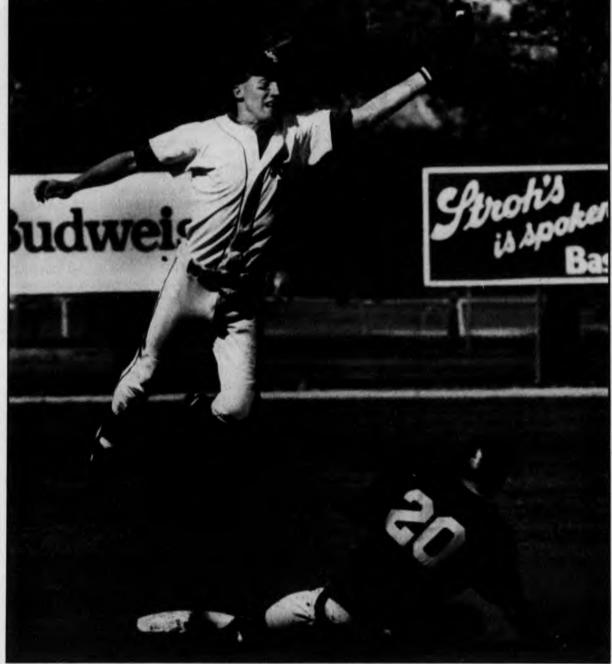

Another six runs provided by hits from Scott McFall, Brian Culp, Lance Wilson and Craig Wilson solidified the Wildcat victory.

Wildcat pitcher Dave Christensen, 3-2, entered the game for starter Jeff Stewart and collected the crucial third out in the fourth inning and the

With the two-game sweep, K-State hit the .500 mark for all-time wins and losses at 1,059 each, and their season record stands at 16-9 going into conference play.

Lokar should not have been denied freedoms

March Madness is here. It's time to side with your favorite team, or side with the team that will put you in the money. But this is a peculiar kind of year, though. Granted, UNLV has players who could probably beat almost any NBA team, and they will probably beat every college team they face this season.

Smooth trick, Jerry Tarkanian, pulling the heart-strings of the NCAA to get your boys back in the

But this isn't about the run to the Final Four, this is about the fashion statement, which every team will be making this year as they get the coveted television exposure that brings in the "green-backs." This is simply about being American.

Every team will be wearing something recognizing the support given to our troops in the Persian Gulf. Every team has already donned a small flag or yellow ribbon and it's good that sports — whether they be college or pro - have done this. Sports are a part of the American fabric and right now we have many Americans overseas who want to know how their favorite team is doing.

However, an ugly thing has been taking place lately and it's something that should not take place in any college or any town in America.

teams have foreign player on the rosters and these players have chosen not to wear the American flag. And fans are letting them now their displeasure with that.

Now really, folks, where are these people from? They're from another country, maybe a country which doesn't support the war. But they are here and they have some of the same rights we have - and one of them is the freedom of expression.

Marco Lokar, a sophomore guard for Seton Hall from Trieste, Italy, was booed every time he touched the ball in the Feb. 2 game. Even after that game, he received threats directed toward himself and his wife, and eventually he quit school and returned to his homeland of Italy.

Now, call me crazy, but I think this country accepted people by the millions to come and have a chance to pursue the American dream.

I'm all for supporting the troops in the Middle East. Heck, I'm one of the many who has family there.

I support the troops in my own way, though. I do it rather quietly and I don't push my feelings onto anybody else. Let everyone support it their own unique way. Maybe teams with foreign members ought to have the United Nations flag on their team outfits.

Now, don't get me wrong, I like the American flag - or the yellow ribbon - on the jersey.

The intolerance aimed at Lokar just isn't what America is about.

we'd been working for all season, and I was frustrated that I didn't get to pitch down there. It has made me even hungrier to get back this year." Percy Eddie, a former member of Clark, who entered the season searching for a staff leader, Hipp has allowed just six earned runs and has 26 strikeouts in 31% innings.

Athletes receive academic assistance

Francisco.

The athletic department provides a support system designed to help ease the strain of balancing academic responsibilities and devotion to college athletics.

Study sessions, tutorial programs and curriculum counseling are some ways the academic counseling program helps athletes make up for time lost to practice and travel.

Not only do athletes devote time and energy in competition that could potentially detract from their school work, but frequently they are subjected to standards to maintain eligibility that are higher than for non-

"We have to reinforce the emphasis on academics because there is such a time demand on the athletic field, and yes, that does put athletes at risk," said Veryl Switzer, associate director of intercollegiate athletics, who helps tie the academic programs to the athletic department.

For these reasons, the academic counseling program provides the athletes with study assistance. Scholarship athletes in revenue sports are required to attend study sessions throughout their first year at K-State. After the first year, athletes may be allowed to forgo the sessions if they demonstrate the ability to perform satisfactorily in class on their own.

Many athletes appreciate the assistance the tutoring programs provide. Don Hilliard, sophomore in English and member of the football team, said he believed the quality of the study program had a direct affect upon the high graduation rate of K-State athletes.

"For a person that's interested in scholastics, it's really nice having free tutoring provided for you," Hill-iard said. "As a student-athlete, you're a student first, and since we do devote a lot of time away from schoolwork, it's really helpful to have it made available. The sessions generally meet three evenings a week, providing tutors who work with groups in particular areas of emphasis. Olympic sport athletes are not required by the athletic department to attend study sessions, but the service is available for them as well, Switzer said. The sessions are held in Durland Hall, Vanier Complex and Derby Food Center. Bryan Maggard, graduate in health and physical education, coordinates the study sessions for the football team. Patsy Brandt directs the sessions for the other sports.

Vicki Riegler, assistant of educational personal programming, directs a tutoring program that provides individual help to athletes. Through the program, athletes may set up regular meetings with a tutor or attend a specially-directed study session if they need extra assistance.

"I think we serve as an extra support to the counseling they receive from their on-campus advisers. They interact with us on a daily basis and get the boost they may need to make up for lost time," Maggard said. "I think there are times when they feel like it is sort of a hassle, but usually they appreciate the effort others put forward to help them, and it can be very rewarding."

the basketball team, is serving as an assistant to the athletic department and advises athletes through the academic counseling program.

Eddie's insight goes beyond understanding the difficulty of juggling the responsibilities of sports and school. Eddie is working to complete his degree after playing professional basketball and said he is experiencing the challenge of returning to school.

"Coming back and trying to adjust to being in school is tough, and I know that the important thing is for the athletes to get their degrees now," Eddie said. "I think they can come to me because I've been where they're

K-State ROTC cadets from the Army and Air Force competed in a 23-mile race across the New Mexico desert March 3.

Kirk Decker, K-State Army cadet and junior in political science, finished first out of 550 competitors

The Army's "Wildcat Battalion" finished fifth overall with a time of 3:30.0, while the Air Force finished further back at 5:18.0.

The fourth annual Bataan Memorprofessor of military science. More than 30,000 soldiers, including 10,000 Americans, died during the week-long journey in 1942 from Corregidor Island up the Bataan Peninsula to the POW camp near Clark Field in the Philippines.

"The memorial's important because it's getting the young future leaders to see the significance and the importance of something like this," Bucher said.

He said the race was divided into march/run while wearing full battle dress, combat boots and two full canteens slung from a web pistol belt.

The heavy-division competitors were required to carry 30-pound backpacks, in addition to lightdivision requirements.

The course was set in the Organ Mountains, which was primarily scrub and rocky desert, Bucher said.

The cadets followed the trail called Jornado del Muerto, known in English as "journey of death."

Manhattan to be host of regional WICI members

MELISSA SMITH Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Professional Chapter of Women in Communications Inc. will be the host of the WICI Midwest Regional Conference today through Saturday at the Manhattan Holidome.

WICI is a national organization with 10,000 members nationwide, said Melinda Sinn, regional conference chairwoman.

She said members come from a variety of areas of communication, including newspapers, public relations, radio, television and advertising.

The Midwest region consists of Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Colorado and Wyoming.

The conference begins tonight with a reception, she said, which is a social event.

Workshops will be Friday and Saturday and will include sessions on fund raising, pay equity and technology.

There will also be a workshop about student interns, she said, that will feature a panel that includes a former intern and a supervisor.

Christine Buchanan, extension publications editor and member of the Manhattan Professional Chapter of WICI, said the variety of subjects, such as new technology, offered at the conference is attractive to both students and professionals.

She said one session will feature a tour of the Kansas Regents Educational Communications Center.

Participants in this session will create a 60-second promotional spot about WICI using the state-ofthe-art equipment at the center, she Sinn said the conference allows professionals to build a network of communicators, as well as enabling students to meet people they might be working with after graduation.

Keynote speakers at the conference will be Karen DeWitt, correspondent for the New York Times; Edward Seaton, publisher of the Manhattan Mercury and 1989-90 president of the Inter American Press Association; and Shirley Lueth, author and humorist.

TELEBridge brings speaker

Palmer to conduct leadership workshop to 8 communities

LAURA BIRRELL

Collegian Reporter

Doris Palmer, a motivational speaker who conducts leadership workshops throughout the world, will be speaking, via TELEBridge hookups, to eight Kansas communities at 7 tonight.

Palmer will present her topic, "How to Recruit and Motivate Volunteers for Community Betterment Activities," through the Regents Network - Dole Communications Center - at K-State.

"Palmer's topic will cover how to recruit volunteers for the betterment of PRIDE and community activities," said Eric Atkinson, Extension radio/television specialist at K-State.

"She will also stress the importance of volunteers to community improvement. Techniques in recruiting volunteers and keeping them interested will be discussed. Palmer will also give details on how to set up a volunteer system."

Stan McAdoo, PRIDE coordinator, said, "All the sites that are participating are enrolled in the PRIDE program. Right now, there are 60 communities enrolled in PRIDE, and these eight workshop sites were chosen because of convenient location to all the communities.

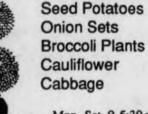

"After the speaker, there will be a question and answer session. The eight workshops can also communicate with each other through the hookup. This will allow them to share problems and solutions. Each community workshop will work on local problems that community members are concerned about.

The workshops will focus on PRIDE's main programs this year, which are water conservation, waste reduction, recycling and Trees for Kansas," he said.

The eight towns that will be the host workshops include Hill City, Colby, Wichita, Belleville, Valley Falls, Dodge City, Elkhart and Erie.

The Kansas PRIDE program is a self-help program for Kansas com-

Musicians dedicate days to drumming

MELISSA SMITH Collegian Reporter

Most afternoons during the week, the sound of drums pounds through campus.

The sound comes from two members of the K-State marching band practicing their bass drums on the lawn between McCain Auditorium and All Faiths Chapel.

Patricia Bennett, sophomore in mechanical engineering, and Rob Genter, sophomore in architecture, practice an hour every day, five days a week for the Troopers Drum and Bugle Corps.

Carrying bass drums that weigh about 25-35 pounds, Bennett and Genter beat out complex rhythms over and over, concentrating until they get it right.

Bennett has participated in the corps. She said although it is serious business, it is also exciting.

She began playing the bass drum in high school when the band needed another percussionist, and she switched from playing the clarinet. Joel Gittle, graduate teaching assistant in music, provides instruction for the two drummers. He said he has participated in the corps since 1979 and has been a percussion instructor for the corps for the past five years.

Troopers is part of a youth activity for students age 21 and under called Drum Corps International, which is sponsored by corporations.

A drum and bugle corps consists of a percussion section, brass section, drum majors and color guard, which uses either flags or rifles.

The percussion section also includes a front ensemble, or pit, which plays in the front of the corps and does not move, Bennett said.

There are currently 85 corps in the United States and 10-20 corps in Canada, as well as corps in Europe, England and Holland, Gittle said.

Each corps consists of no more than 128 members who spend one weekend every month, starting in November, practicing at camps and on their own time.

Students pay a fee, which varies depending on which corps they are involved in, to attend a camp that lasts all summer. They practice 11 hours a day, seven days a week and go on two tours.

A typical day for a member of the corps starts with practice from 8 a.m. to noon and ends with the last of three daily practices from 7 to 10 p.m.

Drummers Corps International provides the students housing with families in the corps' homebase town, Casper, Wyo. While on tour, however, they travel in buses and sleep in gymnasiums and armories, Gittle said.

On the first tour, the corps perform with about nine others and are judged. They then practice for another week to improve before the second tour.

In August, all of the corps compete in the national contest, which will be in Dallas this year. The top 12 corps compete in finals.

Troopers, one of the two oldest corps in Drummers Corps International, has never placed lower than 20th in the 33 years it has been in existence, Gittle said. It placed 17th last Pageant director Nancy O'Kane barked out instructions like, "Relax your shoulders, don't cock your knees and don't forget to smile," as the ladies walked slowly across the church's foyer.

Once their stroll was complete, they were asked to answer a few questions. A few questions like, 'Name three qualities of a friend, define integrity and do clothes make the woman, or does the woman make the clothes?" nearly stumped some of the nervous contestants

Griffitt said the pageant should not be considered a traditional beauty

"It's not a beauty pageant, it's a scholarship pageant. Forty percent of the points are for talent," she said.

'Its a different kind of competition, like basketball or academics," O'Kane said. "A lot is for selfimprovement. It's kind of a miniature finishing school."

O'Kane said this is an important thing, not only for the girls, but for the community.

"When you are on that stage, you never know who is watching and who you are influencing. I'm glad this isn't for everybody, I couldn't deal with it," she said.

Brown spends week with students

DAVE McCULLAGH

Collegian Reporter

Bill Brown is making the rounds, and with a little luck he'll make it through the week. Brown, former director of Student Publications Inc. and graduate of K-State, is visiting the campus and speaking to journalism

"The faces have changed, but many things are the same as when I left," Brown said. see yesterday's students in today's students."

Ulrike Dauer, graduate student in journalism, said, "He has something today's journalists are missing, he is willing to make sacrifices for his devotion to journalism."

Brown left K-State in 1985 for London's City University. After receiving a master's in international journalism at the university, he returned to Kansas to teach, but this time at the University of Kansas.

While having taught at both K-State and and few differences in the journalism departments of the schools.

"The schools are the best in the state and coach for Harris Newspaper Group. among the best in the nation," Brown said. "KU has a bigger building, which has been renovated - I'm sorry to see that both schools have adopted mass communications to accommodate public relations and lations as a journalism sequence. "I think the primary responsibility of the journalism school is a strong news-editorial sequence," Brown said.

Brown said advertising should be taught in the school of business, and he didn't consider public relations an academic pursuit.

The faces have changed, but many things are the same as when I left. I see yesterday's students in today's students.

Sally Routson, coordinator for student activities, said the Union is in need of the increase because of increases in minimum wage, postal rates, and repair and maintenance.

The Student Governing Association is asking for the establishment of a $1.80 SGA line item on the student activity fee.

"Because of our change in focus, we want to serve students better through increased communication,"

If all of the proposed fees pass the regents, K-State students will be paying an additional $16.05 per full-time student and $7 per part-time student per semester in the fall of 1991.

Forum

"I think there is a difference between impacting and degrading the environment. I don't think people are necessarily bad for the environment," he said.

Candidate Edith Stunkel said growth should be defined in more ways than an increase in population.

"My work with the social services gives me another orientation toward growth, and it has to do with the issue of quality of life and the opportunity of people being gainfully employed," she said.

Commissioner Roger Maughmer said Manhattan cannot grow, however, without an increase in population.

"I think we need to be concerned with population growth. But, this is Manhattan, Kan.," he said. "I don't see the City Commission going out and raping the community environmentally, and I don't future Commissions doing that either."

Population growth is going to occur no matter what is done, Candidate Craig Raborn said. What the Commission needs to do is to ensure the increase occurs with a quality base established.

'Manhattan can take a number of steps to make certain what happens here is a positive, healthy growth," he said. "We can work closely with the land use plan — as is being done

The candidates also discussed waste management and debated how active the City Commission should be in lobbying for environmental issues on the Legislative level.

SGA line item will be read

KIMBERLY KOHLS

Staff Reporter

A bill that would establish a line item for the Student Governing Association will be read at the Student Senate meeting at 7 tonight.

If passed, a $1.80 headcount line item would be established for SGA and the budgeting of each year's line item would have to be approved by the Senate Finance Committee.

Presently, SGA is funded through allocations from Senate and was allocated $37,876.17 for the 1990-91 school year. The line item would raise a proposed $66,931 for the next

"Right now, we don't have enough money to serve the students in the ways that we should," said Sally Rouston, coordinator of student services and adviser for SGA. "SGA wants to change its image.'

If passed, the money would be used for several things — advertis-ing, newsletters and a full-time receptionist, Rouston said.

'A person may call in with a question, and the person answering the phone may not know the answer," Rouston said. "The consistency in the office isn't good, and a receptionist would help that.'

Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt said he thinks people may get discouraged when they come into or call the SGA office and the services are inconsistent.

One-hundred-dollar raises for the student body president and student senate chairman are also included in said.

the proposed budget with the line item figured in. Presently, the two earn $400 per month.

"It's impossible for the president to have another job, so you have to compensate them in some way," Rouston said.

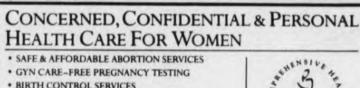

The line item is to be reviewed by the Senate every three years.

After the first reading of the SGA line item bill tonight, it will come to a vote March 29. If passed, it will be sent on to the Kansas Board of Regents along with other fee proposals.

If the line item is not passed, SGA will submit its same budget to the Senate for allocations. The money SGA would receive from the Senate could be used by other organizations if SGA had a line item, Heitschmidt HOLTON — One Kansan who now calls Kuwait home is hoping with "inshallah" that her all-butobliterated country can someday be healed from the ravages of the Persian Gulf War.

Inshallah is a commonly used Arabic word meaning "if it is God's Isabelle Al-Fulaij sat in on Marilyn Quinn's fifth-grade class at Central Elementary School in Holton Thursday morning and shared what it has been like to watch her country literally go up in smoke. "I miss my home, my friends and my lifestyle very much," she said. "I can't wait to go back."

Al-Fulaij has lived in Kuwait for 10 years, but has been in the United States since this past June. As usual, she brought her four children to spend the summer visiting her parents at her childhood home in Soldier. Al-Fulaij's husband, Salah, joined them at the end of July, just days before Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait.

Nine months later the Al-Fulaijs are still here, their home ransacked, their business destroyed and the air in Kuwait too full of toxic smoke to think of returning any time soon. Their only contact has been by phone, which has slowly been restored since the war ended.

Isabelle said when she and her future husband met at Emporia State University, she did not even know what Kuwait was.

"I didn't even know it was a country, much less where it was or anything about it," she said. "Now it is my home.'

fee decisions

According to the meeting's agenda, recommendations to raise tuition and fees were supposed to be presented. But in light of Wednesday's $16-million restoration to the regents' budget in the Kansas House of Representatives, Regent Robert Creighton, Atwood, suggested the board take no action Thursday.

"The full Legislature isn't finished with the regents' budget, and the possibility of further restoration is still possible," Creighton said.

The House Appropriations Committee, however, has recommended the regents raise tuition higher than originally discussed and move up approved increases one year to fall of 1991. The committee recommended raising non-resident tuition for all regents institutions 20 percent rather than the 10 percent increase the regents approved last month.

According to the Appropriations Committee, the recommended tuition hike would raise $7.3 million a Creighton said the non-resident tuition raise could adversely affect those schools with a high number of non-resident students, including K-

He suggested a three-tiered increase for residents, non-residents and students from counties contiguous to Kansas. This would mean students from contiguous counties would pay more than residents, but less than non-resident students.

Action was also delayed on the Student Advisory Committee's proposal for increased standards of faculty language competency.

The proposal would raise the Test of Spoken English minimum score for non-native instructors from 220 to 240, shorten the probation period for scores between 190 and 220 from one year to one semester, and include students in the interview process of non-native instructors.

Administrators were given 90 days to further document the problem before the regents pass a proposal that could seriously affect faculties at all the regents institutions.

K-State Provost James Coffman said that during the 90-day delay, he will use existing data to find the extent of the problem.

"We will compare withdrawal rates from non-native taught classes with those rates from classes in the same discipline taught by native instructors," he said.

The board admitted there are some serious problems with non-native instructors, and many said they were disposed toward implementation of

The burden of proof is now on the administration; the heck with excuses," Regent Charles Hostetler, Manhattan, said.

"If the instructors don't meet the credentials, and the students can't understand them, then maybe the students would be better off not taking the course anyway," he said.

Another topic of lengthy discussion, but no action, was the proposed merger of K-State and the Kansas College of Technology.

Discussion surrounded rumors that the Legislature may decide not to redeploy resources from KCT to K-

"Without that incentive, it's not reasonable to expect the partnership to work," said K-State President Jon

The ultimate decision for a successful merger will be up to the regents, said Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement.

"We are always seeking ways to improve ourselves, so we're still optimistic about the merger," he said.

There was also some talk of system-wide reorganization.

"A system-wide strategic plan is necessary," said Stanley Koplik, the board's executive director. "In a time frame of one year, we will be working on a series of recommendations."

Koplik said he hears complaints of program duplication from both legislators and the public.

"I see a dilemma when WSU proposes an education program that is the same as the programs offered at two other regents institutions," he said.

MRI scanner mobile in city

For residents of Manhattan and surrounding communities, the use of a Magnetic Resonance Imaging scan is as close as Memorial Hospital.

Julie Davenport, director of marketing and public relations at Memorial, said Memorial has been offering the MRI scanner to patients since August of last year. The scanner available at Memorial is a mobile unit in the trailer of a semi-truck.

"We offer mobile services, particularly with the MRI, because it costs a great deal of money to put one in a hospital on a full-time basis," she said. "Starting at a million and a half, it is not cost effective for a population of this size. The semi-truck pulls into the parking lot of Memorial every Monday night, and patients are seen beginning at 7 a.m. Tuesdays.

A MRI scan is like an X-ray, except its images are more detailed and can detect more problems. The scan takes a picture without the use of radiation - several small scans in a period of several minutes.

The self-shielding magnet is in a donut-like dome. A table the patient lies on is slid under the magnet. A patient is placed on the table, usually head first, and then the unit scans a specific part of the body. According to information supplied by Memorial, "MRI works by manipulating the smallest building block of the body, the atom. The body is passed through a strong but harmless magnetic field, and the protons within the nucleus, or center, of the atom, align with the direction of that

A radio signal, also harmless, is passed through the body, and some of the protons absorb the radio-wave energy and shift (resonate).

When the radio signal is turned off, the protons return to their original alignment and release radio-wave energy, which is picked up by delicate sensors in the MRI system. Millions of these tiny signals are processed by a powerful computer and composed into a clear image, from any angle.

'Our MRI is here once a week, and it is pretty busy," Davenport said. "We aren't doing a dozen a day. Each study can take several hours."

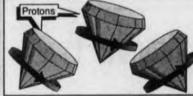

If it wasn't for the mobile unit, area residents would have to travel to Topeka where a permanent MRI scanner is located, Davenport said. "The mobile unit allows those in Magnetic Resonance Imaging is replacing X-ray scans as the common way to look inside the body. MRI offers several advantages including higher resolution, 3-D pictures. Another advantage is no harmful long-term effects due to repeated exposure to the process.

Nuclei of certain atoms spin like microscopic tops. Normally their spin axes are randomly oriented.

In a magnetic field, nuclei tend to align with that field. At the same time, they also wobble, or precess, like a spinning top.

A radio signal from a coil strikes the precessing nuclei that are being held aligned in the magnetic field. The signal makes some nuclei resonate and knocks them out of

When the radio waves are shut off, the protons realign. This realignment generates a small radio-frequency signal of its own, which a computer can translate into images.

Student Senate heard proposals for fee increases in Recreational Services, Student Publications Inc., Student Governing Association and the K-State Union Thursday.

Following 30-minute presentations, Senate heard first readings of the proposed bills. The Recreational Services and the Student Publications bills will be voted Tuesday while the SGA and Union bills will be voted Thursday.

The Rec Services bill requests a $2 building program fee increase for full-time students and a $1 increase for part-time students. Rec Services is also asking to consolidate its recreational building program fee with its recreational services fee. The Student Publications proposal requests an increase in the operational fee to $6 for full-time students and $3 for part-time students. The proposal also requests that an equipment fee be established.

That fee would consist of a $3.90 fee for full-time students and a $1.95 fee for part-time students. This fee would enable Student puter system and allow for maintenance of existing equipment. Student Publications is asking

Publications to purchase a com-for the fee increase because of an increase in production costs and continual equipment failures, said Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications. The SGA proposal would establish a $1.80 headcount line

The line-item increase would provide an additional $66,931 to be allocated by Senate for SGA activities starting with the fall 1991 semester. The Union's proposal asks for a $5 increase to cover operation costs and a $1.75 increase for repair and replacement. Jack Sills, Union director, defended the increase when questioned by the senators.

"The fees would be assessed to meet the needs that currently aren't being met," Sills said.

If all the proposed increases are passed, K-State students can expect to pay an additional $16.05 per full-time student and $7 per part-time student per semester.

Food embargo on Iraq to be lifted

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Security Council's sanctions committee will lift the food embargo on Iraq now that Baghdad has agreed to allow the United Nations to distribute the foodstuffs.

A senior Western diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the sanctions committee would allow food and other essentials into Iraq starting Friday if the Red Cross and United Nations can see that it reaches all parts of the country.

Iraq will have to allow the food to be sent into the Kurdcontrolled areas of the north, and the provinces of the south where Shiites are rebelling, he said.

Soviet officials admit time error

MOSCOW (AP) - Red-faced Soviet officials are admitting they haven't kept the correct time in more than six decades, blaming a mistake in the Stalin era when clocks should have been turned back an hour.

As a result, the officials are scrapping the Soviet version of daylight-saving time this summer. Clocks, however, will still fall back an hour in the autumn.

All this timekeeping havoc is bound to further baffle a nation that has had its share of confusion for 1991.

March 31 is when clocks usually are moved forward an hour for summer time in the Soviet Union, which has 11 time zones. However, four of the republics will follow their rebellious tradition and move their clocks ahead as before.

LAWRENCE (AP) - Soviet scientists visited Lawrence this week to discuss ground water pollution with their counterparts from the U.S. Geological Survey.

The cooperation was initiated under an agreement signed last year by the survey and the Soviet Union's All-Union Scientific and Research Institute for Hydrogeology and Engineering Geology.

As part of the agreement, Soviet scientists Stanislav Kraynov and Valentin Goldberg, along with interpreter Galina Kargina, came to Lawrence to work with USGS research hydrologists Michael Thurman of the Kansas District and Denis LeBlanc of the Massachusetts District.

Thurman said the scientists spent most of the week discovering what their counterparts knew about ground water protection and ground water geochemistry.

The most important thing we learned is the amount of information and knowledge they have that we don't have access to easily because of the language barriers," he said.

Locally produced food snack alternative

MELANIE SCHOENBECK

Collegian Reporter

Now when someone drops 50 cents into the vending machines on campus there is a new option besides the usual potato chips, cookies or candy bars. Kansas Crispy Corn can be chosen instead.

Crispy Corn is a new Kansas product produced in Manhattan by a K-State graduate.

"People correlate Crispy Corn with corn nuts," said Dwight Johnson, president of Kaw Valley Farms, the producer of Crispy Corn. "I don't want to leave the impression that just because you don't like corn nuts, you won't like this product. I think this will appeal to people who don't eat corn nuts because of the tenderness of the product, it won't break teeth."

K-State has played a vital role in the final outcome of Crispy Corn. It has made contributions in areas such as technical information, focus group feedback and package design, Johnson said.

The Small Business Development Center aided Johnson with suggestions on packaging the product. Fred Rice, director of the cenwhile watching a movie.

"The original thought was a blue package. We suggested a red, black and yellow package," Rice said. The product is available in vending machines on campus and local convenience stores. The catch to marketing the product is getting people to try it and put 50 cents down on it, Johnson said.

"I hope it will be a popular product," Johnson said. "Time will tell. The key is getting people to try it, like with any new product. They have to have the willingness to take a chance."

Johnson said he hopes the product will eventually become wellestablished in Kansas and possibly the surrounding states, and the distribution channels will be in place. Most of all, Johnson said he hopes the product gains positive response from the consumers.

Johnson said the sales of Crispy Corn are already increasing, and he thinks it might be because the corn is a better summertime product than a wintertime one. However, he said it will take two to three years to positively confirm whether that's a

Fire hydrants lack adequate water supply

PAUL NOEL

Staff Reporter

Several fire hydrants on campus do not supply an adequate amount of water.

Bill Smith, Manhattan fire chief, said hydrants on campus should be able to supply a minimum of 1,000 gallons of water per minute to effectively combat a large blaze.

There are 84 hydrants on cam-

1,000 gallons or more per minute. Abe Fattaey, University engineer, said mains that feed the hydrants need to be at least 6 inches in diameter to supply enough

"There are still a lot of hydrants on the University fed by 4-inch mains," he said.

The main concern of the campus safety task force is that the Department of Facilities needs to keep the Manhattan Fire Department appraised of the University's plans in building new structures or modifications to existing structures or facilities, said Rob Dieringer, director of campus safety with student government and senior in construction science

"Facilities has not always remembered to include the fire department in its planning," Dierin-

Fattaey said he plans to meet with the fire department to discuss improvements and any concerns the department may have.

The north part of campus and the hydrants south of Fairchild Hall are areas of water-supply concern.

Ned Gatewood, associate University architect, said the current construction to Fairchild does not include upgrading the water lines to the building. Gatewood said the $400,000 project will make Fairchild accessible to the handicap pus, many that do not provide the and upgrade the building so it meets current life-safety codes.

Smith said the fire department is concerned with the accessibility of the hydrants.

There are several hydrants that lack service roads to them, he said, and many of the sidewalks on campus that would be used by fire trucks are above steam

Smith said a fire truck weighs more than 35,000 pounds, and there is doubt about the strength of the tunnels when it comes to supporting that weight.

Fattaey said Architecture and Engineering Services, formerly Facilities Planning, plans to rebuild the main walk through campus this summer so there will be no question of its weight capacity.

Currently, new fire alarms and lit exit and emergency signs are being installed in Seaton Hall, where smoke from a burning roofing tar trailer, outside the building, flooded its classrooms.

Hillbilly mentality leads to energy problem

"I'm not aware of any country that has the capacity to produce oil that is saying, 'Let's save it.' ... That's a strategy that we don't understand, nor do we see any logic behind it." — W. Henson Moore, deputy secretary hat don't you understand, Mr. Moore? It's not hard to spell the word "conservation," but it seems to be too taxing for your department to say it.

Especially for President Bush. His new National Energy Strategy calls for a boost in domestic oil production from about 7.3 million barrels per day in 1990 to about 10 million barrels per day by the year 2005. Under the President's proposed plan, the oil harvest would taper to less than 5 million barrels per day by 2030.

Why produce more oil, you ask? American oil company officials are warning that, unless the United States increases domestic output, our nation cannot continue to be competitive in world markets. And besides, if offshore oil, gas fields and deposits in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in northern Alaska, are left untapped, America's petroleum output will fall drastically during the next 20

So what's wrong with that?

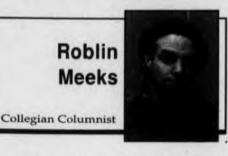

The Bush administration must be worried that we as a nation already import 42 percent of our oil, and it is estimated by early next decade, that figure will swell to 65 percent unless someone does something about it. The solution: pump, pump, pump ... drain, drain,

Well, while the boys in Washington are hungry to clean up fossil fuel plate, I think there are a few things they don't understand besides the phrase "Let's save it."

The fact is, we just don't have the juice. U.S. oil reserves are all but depleted in relation to our ravenous rate of consumption. It's not that we haven't tried to locate new sources in the past. In fact, the United States is perhaps the most poked and prodded nation on the face of the planet. It's also not that we don't have wells already producing, as we do indeed account for about 600,000 of the world's 900,000 producing oil wells drilled.

Why, then, are we so far behind? It's mainly because our wells typically produce only about 15 barrels per day, whereas a Middle Eastern well produces about 5,000 barrels per day. The cost of bringing a barrel of oil to the surface in Saudi Arabia is just $1, and the United States must settle for a cost per barrel quite a few times that figure.

What about the ANWR reserves? It's post-logic, how about this example? I don't underulated that this area holds from 600 million to 9.2 billion barrels of oil. Where Moore is concerned, not maximizing this opportunity is "costing us," and the "ANWR is of no value unless you produce it."

Frankly, I fail to see much logic in deputy Moore's convoluted reasoning. First of all, the ANWR, as one might guess, is exactly what it claims to be - a refuge for wildlife and not low pump prices.

In addition, I don't think conservationists are demanding all oil production stop immediately (although I'm sure some radicals are). Instead, they're asking that the government begin to taper production and exploitation and devote more time and serious consideration to alternative energy sources beyond that of nuclear power.

If deputy Moore wants down-to-earth stand why the government can't impose a research and development tax on at least gasoline if not all fossil fuels.

If prices at the pump were sustained at $2 or $2.50 per gallon, still far below that of most other countries by the way, the extra revenue generated could subsidize exploration and development of wind, solar, geothermal, hydroelectric and even novel approaches to power production. As another beneficial consequence, I think the consuming public would finally have to wake up and start buying bicycles.

For an illustration a little closer to home, consider Dodge City. This booming midwestern metropolis is officially the windiest city in America with an average wind speed clocking in at close to 15 miles per hour. Much of the land around the city is open and treeless. Wouldn't it be wise to put air power technology to work in cowtown? Sure seems simple to me. So why does Bush and his cabinet continue to ignore the painfully obvious? Totally avoiding any war motive speculation so as to refrain from completely digressing (but no doubt that is a huge factor, as Kuwait alone holds about 10 percent of the world's oil reserves), the only other guess I have is that our president must be guilty of some sort of "Beverly Hillbillies" fantasy mentality.

I can envision Bush and deputy Moore lounging around the cement pond out behind the White House. Barbara is mixing up a batch of her famous lye soap, and Quayle is in the kitchen spooning up an Olympic-size bowl of hog jowls and possum fixins.

Bush turns to Moore and says "W.H., I think I'm gonna go shootin' for some food. Maybe up from the ground'll come a bubblin' crude. You know, black gold, Texas tea." Well, the next thing ya know, ole Bush is elected to a second term.

(Bush could be genuinely concerned about our economic stability in the global marketplace, but I think it's more than mere coincidence that Secretary of State James Baker III looks an awful lot like Mr. Driesdale.)

he facts are that whereas the president's approach to energy and the environment might make for decent reruns as an oil strategy, it's an ancient and half-baked attempt at best.

It's time our leaders start looking to the future and realizing that economics can't always form the basis for sound policy where finite resources and the environment are concerned. Anyway, Buddy Ebsen is still alive. I wonder what he's doing in 1992.

Get books in order

As if federal funding for higher education wasn't hard enough to come by, Stanford University has undoubtably influenced future funding for universities and colleges across the country.

Stanford, like thousands of other universities, receives research dollars from the federal government. Additionally, the the nation funds a portion of the university's overhead costs of conducting such research.

A federal auditor recently gandered through the financial books of Stanford and found the government or you and me, the taxpayers, paid for excessive overhead to the tune of $200 million.

Just where the proverbial line is drawn between acceptable overhead and extravagant purchases is the issue at hand.

There are legitimate costs the government must pay to maintain research at public institutions. Paying for heating and air conditioning, purchasing of library books and maintaining laboratory equipment are all generally accepted costs.

Most universities deduct the maintenance expense of the university president's house.

Campus voices

There doesn't seem to be much wrong with that, since administrators often court researchers to complete their education or teach at the university.

Stanford has gone beyond the acceptable by charging the government for yacht renovation, a piano in the president's house, a $1,600 shower curtain, cedar-lined closets, a wedding reception for the president and his new wife and alcohol for pre-game football parties.

Stanford has since admitted to a few mistakes and is paying back some of the money, but it is still fighting other accusations in court.

Universities across the country, like Harvard, MIT and the University of Pennsylvania, are already being investigated for similar misappropriations.

The Kansas Board of Regents schools, including K-State, should take a hard look at what is happening and make sure the books are clean as can be. With funding from federal and state governments getting thinner and thinner, financial scandals may be the death of higher education at many institutions.

Eaters come first

The K-State Union has recently been the subject of criticism. Some friends and I had an experience there, and I wish to share it

Some days ago, I was in the Union having a snack with friends and discussing a class. At that moment, some professors (including the department head of my field) were finishing a meeting, and they came over to say hello. We were talking and laughing when, suddenly, a young man came to our table and asked if we could shut up.

One of my friends answered that this place was not the library. The young man replied that there were 20 other people in the area who were studying who felt the same way he did. My friend countered by saying they could go to the library with him. At that moment, the young man told us to f***-off (a couple of times).

This made me very angry, and I went to the Union's offices to complain to the person in charge. She, in a very lovely way, told me the Union is a place where you can go to study and eat, but if you are studying, you can't expect silence from other people around you, because the cafeteria is an eating and socia-

The situation makes me think of the rude way some people behave, and the bad manners they show when they use those expressions in front of older people. I am a foreign student in this country, but I believe respect for others exists in all cultures.

Another thing that also came to mind was with the tray in my hands, walked through the cafeteria searching for a table and it turns out State and in Manhattan.

there are none available. However, there are some tables that can seat four people where only one person is sitting, who is not eating but reading or studying. In that case, I think the principle objective of the cafeteria is not being carried out. The person who goes to the cafeteria to eat can't do so because others are occupying the tables, but not eating.

I would like to tell those students who go to the cafeteria and expect silence that the University has a library where there is no noise. Also, the Union has very pretty and comfortable rooms for studying. Finally, I would like to tell that disrespectful guy that if you are going to demand silence, don't do it in such a rude way. I believe we live in a society with norms we have to respect to live in harmony.

Bikers unite

Are you interested in improving conditions for bicycling at K-State and in Manhattan? Are you concerned about riding safety, bike security on campus, inadequate bicycle parking facilities, poor road conditions or other cycling issues? Would you be willing to work toward making K-State and Manhattan a more "bicycle friendly" campus and town?

We're interested in forming a bicycling advocacy group in Manhattan. We're open to ideas about what problems exist, how these problems can be solved and what role an adocacy group should play. We think a group can get more done than each of us individuthe times I have gone to the Union to eat, and ally, and it's time there was some form of organization to speak out for bicyclists at K-

If you are interested in participating in a bicycle advocacy organization in Manhattan, come at 9 p.m. Tuesday to the Union 208 for a brainstorming meeting. Although we are holding the meeting in the K-Stae Union, we envision this as a community-wide group and invite all concerned bicyclists, racers, commuters, tourists, recreational riders, road riders, moutain bikers and whatever other kind of bicyclist you may consider yourself to participate. We are interested in exchanging ideas so K-State and Manhattan can become a safer, friendlier, better community for

Campaign continues

Editor,

Good morning, students of K-State. This small but important letter is in regard to the ongoing campaign of Craig Raborn. He is one K-State student who is brave and bold enough to run for a city commission seat in Manhattan. I feel that if Raborn is elected, he will add a bit of color to the drab city commission we have right now. It would also be good for the commission to have a student on board so the students at K-State might have a say in what happens in Manhattan. If you feel Raborn would be a prime candidate, please vote for him in the upcoming election or continue to write letters of support for his election because he still has a hard; road ahead. Thank you for your time.

Students review harmony week plans

Committee discusses event organization, individual roles

JIM STRUBER Consumer Reporter

The 1991 Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week planning committee met at 1:30 p.m. Thursday in Fairchild 102 to discuss the preparation of upcoming events to begin October 7-11.

The planning committee dealt with the appointment of co-chairs to coordinate the activities, formation of the committee, the overall purpose of harmony week and the fundraising activities necessary to finance the activities.

Marlene Howell, instructor of women studies, said the committee should have more organization and assign specific roles to individuals and rotate crucial tasks on a monthly

She said the co-chairs will become overburdened, and eventually burned out, with the ever-mounting tasks of coordinating the weeks' activities to their ultimate conclusion in

'The month of April is crucial, we must have three or four meetings to coordinate the activities and assign members to subcommittees," Howell

Andrew Cordero, director of the minority engineering program and 1990 harmony week co-chairman, said much of the planning is done during the summer, and the students who participate in the spring semester have left for summer jobs, so student participation wanes.

He agreed with the revision of the current co-chair system and suggested incorporating facilitors to spearhead the committee efforts.

"It is critical that we have student involvement throughout the planning phase of the week," Cordero said. Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, said she suggested the sharing of committee tasks by implementing a system where nonstudents and students team up to coordinate the weeks' activities.

The planning committee agreed with the suggestions and appointed Phil Anderson, instructor of speech, and Stephen Moore, junior in philosophy, as co-facilitors for the month of April.

Anderson said he was intrigued by the suggestions about the committee leadership.

"This forces you into a position of arguing or discussing until there is a consensus within the group," Ander-

The committee structure was discussed, and it was suggested and approved to have a steering committee of dedicated committee members and an open brainstorming meeting where everyone on the campus and in the Manhattan community is encouraged to participate.

"I don't think we lose a lot by having the meetings open to everyone," Cordero said.

The next meeting is scheduled for 3:30 p.m. April 1 in the K-State Union 209. At this meeting, the planning committee will send invitations to individuals to represent groups and organizations on the committee.

chairman

"The prime goal will be to research committee participants and invite people to attend the meeting,"

Anderson said the committee should also discuss the philosophical statement the week represents. Cordero said the intent of the committee was to be more inclusive of the diversity on campus.

Cordero and Anderson agreed the committee should consider renaming the week to reflect the intent of the committee's purpose. The committee decided to look into the recommendations as more committee members are appointed.

The planning committee expressed concern about finances. Scott said she felt the finances for the week should receive much of the initial attention.

Cordero said last year's committee was $500 in the red, and it will be crucial to define the sources of funding this year and explore other avenues of funding.

Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for multicultural affairs, said the 1990 budget was about $10,000.

Saturday at the Days Inn

"Different schools will be the host of the conference every year," said Barbra Nelson, a senior in construction science and chairperson of K-State's chapter of AGC. "It is determined at the annual conference who will be the host of the next year's event.'

Nelson said 45 schools were invited from around the area to attend this year's conference.

"Of the 45 schools invited, we are expecting representatives from 11 to attend," Nelson said. "There will be about 64 out--of-state student guests and 28 students from Kansas State.'

One of the biggest attractions will be Will Goldsby from NASA, Nelson said. Goldsby will be conducting a lecture on space construction.

Other lecturers expected to speak at the conference are Sarah Merrill, assistant professor of philosophy, who will speak on the importance of construction ethics; Steve Miller, director of intercollegiate athletics, who will conduct a motivational lecture; as well as Casey Hulsey, a construction lawyer for J.E. Dunn Construction in Kansas City.

"One of the goals of the conference is to present new material to the students and show them some of the world's latest technology in their field."

The AGC conference is funded by student registration fees and K-State student government.

Women's group discusses bill

JEFF STURDY

Collegian Reporter

The National Organization for Women had its March meeting Thursday night.

NOW is a women's organization that addresses human issues, especially those concerning women, said Susan Butterfield, membership chairwoman of Manhattan's chapter of NOW.

Kelly Kutula, the legislative lobbyist for the Kansas-based NOW, was the guest speaker. She spoke about many issues and proposed bills and amendments that have come up in the Legislature the last couple of years.

One issue NOW is very actively addressing is the reproductive rights of women. This area includes the issues of abortion and birth control. As a whole, NOW is pro-choice and supports the use of irth control.

About two months ago, a parental notification bill was introduced - it is currently in a federal and state committee.

The bill states a woman less than 18 years of age must provably notify at least one parent before an abortion. But, if this part of the bill is contested and proved unconstitutional, the second option is written into the bill requiring minors to get a judical by-pass to have an abortion, Kutula said.

NOW is lobbying to have the age lowered or change the requirement of having parental consent to the consent of any adult.

Manhattan's chapter of NOW is pushing Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, chairwoman of this committee, to introduce a gender balance policy bill. The intent of this bill is to push state boards and commissions to make them gender and race balanced according to populations in the area, Kutula

Art portrays sensitivity

Marx's interpretations result in award-winning works

BETH J. GAINES Collegian Reporter

Robert Marx is concerned about people. It can be seen in his drawings, and heard in his voice and philosphy.

The artist, born in Germany in 1925, said he gets inspiration for his works through everyday interactions with people. His interpretations result in award-winning works of art.

"It is like a conversation on a piece of paper, it takes a lot of involvement and many hours," Marx said. Marx said he considers himself a moralist, and many of his works are a self-analysis of an issue. "I nag on institutions, which do not work properly. Most institutions start out good, but then something goes wrong, which must be corrected so people do not get hurt," Marx said. Marx has had more than 70 oneman shows in various universities and gallaries across the United States. Currently, 18 drawings are on display in the Gallery 6, located in the Art building.

Charles Stroh, professor of art, said the department had been working since 1985 to arrange for Marx to visit campus.

Tennis team finally at home 'Cats, 'Hawks set

WSU foe for squad

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

Considering that they carry a 3-13 record that includes losses to several nationally-ranked opponents, the tennis team can look to Saturday's meeting with Wichita State with some relief.

Playing at home, with Angie Gover back in the lineup, the team will finally be competing without its back against the wall. Those backs have been there for much of the spring season.

Without Gover, who was sidelined by illness, and Rosemary Hunter, who left school and returned to Australia, the team was able to take just five players on the spring break road trip. Making matters worse, the trip's schedule contained matches with seventh-ranked Arizona State and 11th-ranked Arizona.

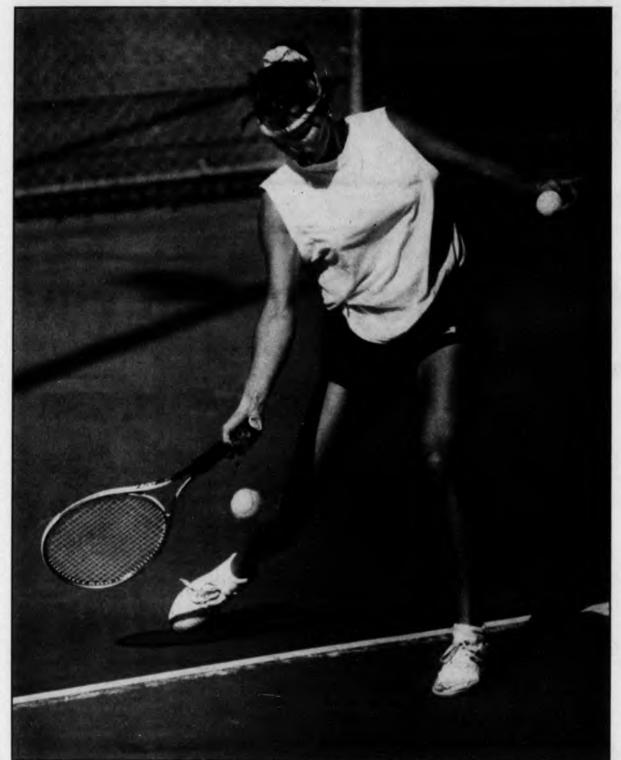

Coach Steve Bietau certainly isn't viewing the Shockers as a pushover. He noted that three members of the WSU squad — Gialocarla DiLaura, Karen Theck, and Colleen van den Heever - have recorded wins against K-State in the past.

"I've had a lot of respect for those three all along, and now their depth is much better than in the past," Bietau said of the Shockers. "This is the best their team has been in the past four or five years.'

While WSU may not present K-State with an easy win, however, this meeting gives the Wildcats an opportunity to start on even ground instead of having to fight an uphill battle. Bietau admits taking on a less overpowering opponent could help the team gather itself for the Big Eight season, but he said the team's performance level must remain constant, regardless of the opponent.

I don't want them to lower their standard of play. I want them to raise their level of play against competition such as what we've seen recently," Bietau said. "That's the direction we want the program to be heading, and you don't get there by lowering your level against people you should beat."

The preliminaries - as impressive as they might have been are now over.

It's time to start playing for a trip to Oklahoma City, Okla.

The K-State baseball team, with wins over nationally ranked Wichita State, Texas A&M and Arkansas on the non-conference ledger thus far, will battle rival Kansas in a four-game, conference-opening series beginning tonight at Frank Myers Field.

After charging through the Big Eight campaign last season to gain a berth in the four-team league tourney for the first time since 1985, Coach Mike Clark's Wildcats have a definite goal in mind this season - to make a return trip to the tourney and come home with a championship.

The road to OKC begins tonight at 7.

"We're trying to get to 12 wins (in the conference)," Clark said. That's the bottom line, to get that 12-win minimum. To do that, you have to do what you can to take care of things at home."

Staff ace Kent Hipp, 4-1, will take the mound for K-State tonight. In Saturday's 4 p.m. twi-night doubleheader, Sean Pedersen, 3-1, and Tim Churchman, 1-1, will toe the rubber for the 'Cats. Chris Hmielewski, 2-2, will pitch in the finale Sunday at 1

The two teams split their fourgame set in Lawrence last season, and Clark anticipates a dogfight this weekend as well.

"This year, we're going to see two pretty even ballclubs," he said. "And, from our standpoint, we've got a lot of Kansas kids on the roster, and they always get up for this series."

Earlier this week, Clark was disgusted with his team's play in the final game of a doubleheader split with Southwest Missouri State and in both games of a doubleheader split with Washburn.

That frustration has now subsided.

"We had our little slump here at the beginning of the week, but other than that, we've done the job offensively," he said. "The character of this team is pretty good. We're pretty focused on what we want to do.'

And what this team wants to do now is get a few wins this weekend that will start it on its return trip in May to Oklahoma.

Little League baseball coach Daniel McKeever raised the money from his squad and sent it on to the Kansas City Royals.

"Their eyes got like silver dol-lars. They said, 'You're doing what?" said McKeever, an attorney in this North Florida city and, like Jackson, an Auburn alumnus. There was some debate, though, before the players started digging into their pockets. "A 10-year-old said, 'He's too big a risk,'" McKeever said Thurs-injury as a running back for the Los Angeles Raiders in January and was waived by the Royals this week. Some doctors said the injury will prevent him from playing again.

The 14 youngsters, some just learning to catch a ball and hit, dug out their change and signed a letter to the Royals. McKeever mailed the letter with the $1, and, mindful of the 2 p.m. Friday waiver deadline, sent a copy by facsimile machine to Kansas City, Mo.

McKeever said Jackson must follow the same rules as his other "Please advise Mr. Jackson that

"I'm sure when they got a fax from an attorney, their response was, 'You suppose this idiot is serious?" McKeever said. But club spokesman Steve Fink

Richmond is the player who most of the older students at K-State can remember. His physique, shooting ability and playing skills made him one of the most popular athletes this school has ever seen.

Posters of Richmond are pasted over bedroom walls all over this town. The Golden State bandwagon picked up a lot of folks in Manhattan when the Warriors drafted him after the 1988 season. Enough of them are still around that it would be well worth trying to bring the Warriors in for an exhibition game this fall, just like Blackman's return to K-State three years ago.

With all of Richmond's popularity, it should be remembered who gave K-State that rare moment in the athletic spotlight, Blackman's shot is an image that 'Cat diehards across the country will always remember.

New video releases nominated for awards

ERIC MELIN Collegian Reviewer

With the Academy Awards drawing near, it's time for everyone to think back on their favorite movies of 1990. However, the Academy always seems to gloss over some of the best films. Here are two of them only out for a limited time in certain places, but now available on home video.

"Henry: Portrait of A Serial Killer"

This John McNaughton film was one of the first to cause the NC-17 rating controversy. It was eventually released unrated, so it didn't make it into many commercial theatres. The ultimate horror film, this movie makes "The Silence of the Lambs" seem like "The Little Mermaid."

Basically, "Henry: Portrait of A Serial Killer" is just more realistic. Set in Chicago, the story follows a couple days in the life of Henry (Micheal Rooker).

A wanderer, he spends a lot of time driving around, but is temporarily settled down in a low-rent apartment with a friend from jail. Henry has killed so many people since his release that he can't even remember what he used to murder his mother when he was 14.

He does odd jobs, such as exterminating, for money. His roommate, Otis, works two days a week at a gas station and sells pot to rich highschool kids on the side.

When Otis' sister Becky (Nancy Arnold), comes to stay for a while, the naive young woman falls for Henry.

Since the movie has a real low budget, it maintains a non-glamour feel. Hell, it looks like it could've been filmed with a camcorder. This isn't to say that it's not extremely well done.

Director McNaughton has a simplistic approach that's very effective. There are no fancy camera tricks, and you have to keep reminding yourself that it's only a movie.

McNaughton's brilliant film raises a million questions about moral decline in today's society. It's disturbing how easy it is to kill someone if you feel like it.

"Wild at Heart"

Although Diane Ladd was nominated in the Best Supporting Actress category for this weird movie, it was otherwise ignored by the Academy.

Dirrector David Lynch, the man solely responsible for making people turn on their televisions again, takes his patent "Twin Peaks" madness to the screen with a vengeance.

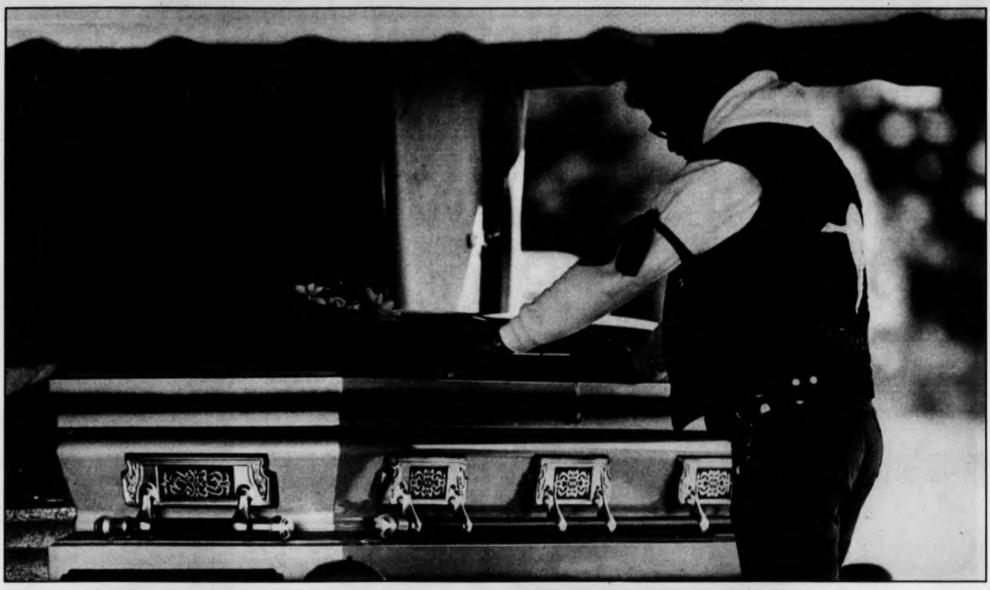

"Wild at Heart" is a crazy, raunchy cross-country road trip. We follow the adventures of two free-spirited young lovers, Sailor (Nicholas Cage) and Lulu (Laura Dem) as they travel across the country trying to get as far away from Lulu's mom as possible.

The mother, played by Ladd, agonizes over the loss of her daughter to Sailor.

On our two-hour plus journey with Lulu and Sailor, we are treated to a number of bizarre characters.

From beginning to end, the movie is pure entertainment. It's more of a violent modern-day fairy tale than anything else.

The only statement "Wild at Heart" really makes is that times have drastically changed. For his present-day fantasy, Lynch had to cut some particularly graphic scenes so it wouldn't get an "X" rating.

Sgt. Joseph Petersen, NCOIC of radiology at Irwin Army Community Hospital, said the mobile MRI unit began servicing Irwin hospital last week and will now visit the hospital every Wednesday, but may be scheduled for an additional visit every week.

"We are borderline for too many in a day," he said. "Moving to two days a week depends on how many scans the doctors order."

They may have to expand because they are maintaining a full load, even with the 1st Infantry Division deployed to the Persian Gulf, Petersen said.

"We have plugged into a day in the week, so that if we need to expand to two, we can," he said.

Scott Siebels, MRI technician who travels with the mobile unit, said the scanner is owned by Shared Medical Services and is based out of Mid-

"We print up a hard copy on X-ray film, so the hospital can keep a permanent copy of the scan," he said.

Davenport said that although the service is not new, Blue Cross/Blue Shield insurance will not cover some orthopedic services.

K-State students spend spring break hiking Grand Canyon

Forty K-Staters braved strong winds, rain and snow to spend spring break hiking inside one of the seven wonders of the natural world, the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River in northwestern Arizona.

Organized by the Union Program Council, the trip offered a choice of three trails, all beginning on the south rim of the canyon.

Hikers headed down their respective trails on the morning of March 10, not to see modern conveniences, such as showers or bathrooms, until late afternoon March 14.

"I started to realize the danger I was getting myself into when I saw the first trailhead," said Pete Ghiselli, freshman in business.

Ghiselli and 15 other K-Staters began hiking at Moran Point and traveled about six miles on the New Hance Trail to camp on the Colorado River March 10.

They left about 9 a.m. and reached their campsite about eight hours later. Storms moved into the Canyon from the west as the group finished eating dinner.

Hikers donned rain gear during a light rain fall until late morning. This was the second day they had to hike through rain. The group dealt with some of the most dangerous trails of the trip Monday afternoon.

High winds, combined with rock overhangs, narrow trails and 500-foot drops to one side, made the second day of hiking both psychologically challenging and dangerous.

"The strong winds on the second day made the trails much more difficult than they really were. Sometimes we had to stop for a minute bacause wind gusts were so strong." said Marcia Bertsch, sophomore in biology. The group followed Hance Creek away from the Colorado River, making camp on the creek late Monday afternoon. Despite temperatures reaching the low 30s that night, the group was able to hike in 60-degree weather the third day.

Tuesday's challenge was Tonto Trail, which was flat and easily conquered as it circled Horseshoe Mesa. The last of the hikers reached the campsite on Cottonwood Creek early in the afternoon.

After spending the day resting and exploring Horeshoe Mesa and the surrounding area, the group again camped on Cottonwood Creek Wednesday night.

The hike out of the Grand Canyon, reserved for Thursday, was the hardest day of the trip.

After rain showers before dawn, the group began its ascent at the base of Horseshoe Mesa. A light snow fell for 15 to 30 minutes.

Many said the hike to the Rim was the most difficult because of an ice storm on the Rim Wednesday night and additional snowfall Thursday moming.

"The snow and ice on the trails made it a lot harder and much more dangerous to hike, but made it a true adventure," Ghiselli said.

All hikers were glad to reach the rim; none seemed to regret the adventure.

"I can say I've done something not too many people can," Ghiselli said. "I hiked one of the seven wonders of the world."

Stephane Duran, exchange student in agricultural economics, prepares for the hike out of the Grand Canyon Thursday by purifying drinking water from Cottonwood Creek Wednesday afternoon.

Kris Bargas, sophomore in biology, looks towards the Colorado River shortly after starting down the New Hance Trail. Hikers traveled close to eight hours on the first day.

Top: Craig Thomas, freshman in business, tries to light a small liquid fuel stove used to cook dehydrated dinners. The stove had to be shared by eight people since two of the stoves in the 16-member group were faulty. This made dinner an ordeal of patience.

Above: Participants hiking in the second group of 16 spend Wednesday exploring Cottonwood Creek after three days of hiking. Hikers enjoyed temperatures near the 70 degree mark on both Tuesday and Wednesday.

All-night study areas limited

Extended library, Union hours suggested to meet additional space requirements

Every night just past midnight, after Farrell Library personnel has switched off the lights, locked the Durland Hall is one such all-night study heaven, a place where students can pull all-nighters.

Students take advantage of the study booths in Durland's lobby on the second floor. Most of the time, more than 20 students can be found studying at the tables and on the couches, even at late-night and earlymorning hours. Still, others study in one of the classrooms or the computer labs downstairs.

"We come here every day," said Dong Lee, freshman in journalism and mass communications.

Lee said he lives off campus, but he can study better in Durland than at home. So, if he wants to study seriously, he goes to Durland.

Sun Chang, freshman in interior design and West Hall resident, said she studies in Durland because it is more comfortable than the other study space provided in her residence

"In the study room in West Hall the heater does not work," Chang

But, Lee said there are some disadvantages to studying at Durland.

"You have to be early, because the front doors are locked automatically around midnight," he said. "So if out the key for an unlimited time, Anyou're coming from the library, it is difficult to get in.'

He said if students don't get there before the doors are locked, or know someone who can let them in, they just have to go home.

Both Lee and Chang agreed there should be more late-night study space available on campus. Lee suggested an extension of Farrell Library hours.

Jason Harris, junior in education and a resident of Goodnow Hall, also said additional late-night study spaces are needed.

Harris suggested leaving the K-State Union Stateroom open at night, which now closes at 11 p.m.

Harris said he would prefer additional study areas on campus rather than in the residence halls. "Each hall has at least one own study room," said Theresa Reif, president of Ford Hall and junior in journalism and mass communications. Reif said around finals time, the

About 500 students live in the Strong Complex, which includes Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile halls. Each residence hall has a study area in the basement and on each floor.

"We meet the need," said Brenda Moeder, assistant complex director and graduate student in college student personnel.

She said the individual study rooms for two to six people are open all night. Students can check out a key. One of them even has a drafting

"At finals time it gets busy. People reserve the study rooms ahead of time because they are the most convenient," said Stacey Grecian, resident of Boyd Hall and sophomore in

"Usually during finals, people are waiting in line on a list for the study rooms," said Saul Flanner, president of Goodnow Hall and senior in fine

Goodnow Hall has six study rooms for its 630 residents. The top floor, as a study floor, is quiet all the time, and during finals most floors declare quiet hours, he said.

Flanner said five of the study rooms are so small only two people can get in, and keys can only be checked out for two hours. One bigger study room is open 24 hours to hall residents. Seven students can study there at the same time.

Flanner said some students go to Durland Hall, which is nearby. "After midnight there is no central study area on campus," said Helen Cooper, space analyst for the division of facilities.

She said the library would like to stay open but does not have the

She said the University must consider lighting and heating of not only the study area itself, but also in the corridors leading to the restrooms. Also, someone has to watch the security of the building, the equipment and the students.

Cooper said some buildings are generally open, others at various times on special request.

For instance, she said, Seaton Hall, Seaton Court, Justin Hall and the computer labs in Fairchild, Dickens and Durland Halls are open 24 hours. Cardwell Hall closes at 1 a.m.

David Mugler, director of the College of Agriculture, said graduate students have their own office.

"Weber Hall is used every night, also longer than 11 p.m.," said Miles McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry.

He said the number of students at night varies between 15 and 20, but he has sometimes counted as many as 100 students there.

"Up to now there seemed not to be a great demand, but if there is interest, college departments and student government should tell where and when additional space and hours are needed," Cooper said.

"If there is a need we surely should answer to it," said Pat Bosco, associate vice president of institutional advancement.

Bosco said housing is looking for additional space this year.

Tough problems face Eastern bloc

Lack of money, inflation plague region

RYAN HAYTER

Collegian Reporter

With the demise of communism in Eastern Europe, the region's countries are haunted by old problems as they struggle to reorganize.

Peter Sugar, an expert on Eastern European history from the University of Washington, said the joy of the successful revolutions that ousted communism in 1989 have turned into gloom and real troubles.

Sugar, an Hungarian born immigrant, spoke to a forum in the K-State Union Thursday evening about events leading to the Eastern European revolutions and the trials that now face the independent countries.

He said the deterioration of the communist system began when it was thrust upon the nations in the beginning.

"The new system was totally alien to them," he said. "They never really adapted to it. People were not convinced communism was right.'

He said when Stalinism became the official rule in Eastern Europe, nations were told to transform into carbon copies of the Soviet Union.

The industrial problems that plague the region today are carryovers from a post World War II Soviet movement.

Easter musical written by 2 area women

Tax collector tells Christ's story in 'Glorify'

HOPE SWARTZ

Collegian Reporter

A tax collector will tell the story of Christ's life in "Glorify the Lamb," a community-wide Easter pageant or-ganized by the Manhattan Christian College at 7:30 tonight at the Westview Community Church, 3001 Fort Riley Blvd.

The hour-long musical drama was co-written by RubyAnn Poulson, associate professor of music, and Marsha Stevens, music instructor, both of Manhattan Christian College.

"It's the life of Christ," Stevens said. "Basically, it starts with the triumphal entry. There's a little bit before that about John the Baptist, but the main character is Zacchaeus, who tells the story. It is set in flashback, and the audience sees the events as he sees them."

Stevens said Zacchaeus was a tax collector who was hated by the people. He climbed up in a sycamore tree to get a better view of Christ at a gathering. Jesus saw Zacchaeus and told him to come down. Jesus accompanied Zacchaeus home for dinner, during which he changes Zacchaeus's life.

"The reason why we came up with Zacchaeus is because it's a remote character to tell the story of Christ, someone different. It's a fresh outlook instead of just telling the story,"

"We wanted somebody who was touched, and who's life was changed to tell the story. He was the remotest character we could think of. He's only mentioned one time in the Bible," she said.

The script was compiled from the Bible, other plays and some input by the co-authors. The women worked on the script for two days non-stop, Stevens said.

The music consists of classical and contemporary Christian music performed by more than 35 choir members from MCC, area churchs and groups. The play was organized as a community event in an effort to make this an Easter tradition in Manhattan.

'This year the response came very slowly from churches. We got responses from Council Grove, Clyde and Crestview Christian Church in Manhttan," Stevens said. "There are other churches involved, but they're people we know at K-State.

This is a very big production. It has a very large cast. There are 50 to 60 people with some playing dual

The actors range in age from 8 to 60 and are from MCC, K-State and churches in Manhattan and Fort Riley.

It's the life of Christ. Basically, it starts with the triumphal entry.

-Marsha Stevens instructor of music

"The actors fit really well into their roles. Even the fill-ins, such as the disciples, portray their characters well and help support the main characters," said Troy Gilmore, K-State senior in park resource and forestry management, who plays Caiaphas and John the Baptist.

"Jesus couldn't have accomplished as much as he did without 12 disciples, and we couldn't either.

"One of our biggest scenes is the temple scene. Jesus comes into the temple and sees the tax collecters and sellers buying and selling doves," Gilmore said. "He gets upset. This is his father's house, not Wal-Mart.

"The first time we did it, it was chaos. Everybody on stage grabs money or runs for their lives. A lot of actors get caught up in the excitement and make it come alive. We might have 30 people on stage, but you know who they are.'

The audience also plays a role in the play, and a lot of audience participation occurs.

Another important part of the play is the use of music and lighting to carry off very elaborate scenes. Those involved are only hinting at the dramatic spectacles they have in "The drama is not so elaborate that everything is there. A lot of it is left up to the audience's imagination," Stevens said.

"It's almost like seeing it in a dream. Zacchaeus is always present. He's always there in the scene, even though he may be off to the side or in the shadows. He is there telling the story even though the characters

This is not the first production the women have done. They have written similar plays in the past and plan on undertaking a new script next

"We'll probably do a different program every year, and we want it to be a community effort thing," Stevens said. "Anything anybody would like to contribute to the production,

Even though the war is finished, there are still soliders in the Middle East seeking penpals.

Gregg Rhame, son of the commander of the 1st Infantry Division, Maj. Gen. Thomas Rhame Riley, has a list of about 700 soldiers from the 1st Division who wish to have a penpal.

"I'm trying to get people interested and see how many they would want to write to," Rhame

"I send them the solider's name, and then it is up to them to write to the soliders.

About 200 letters have gone from Kansas alone since the deployment of the division.

Roesler said she didn't hear back from any of the soliders until the fighting had stopped.

The soliders usually like to hear about my family, my home, birthdays and what I like to do, just getacquainted types of things," she said. "They are amazed that I'm a native Kansan."

Roesler was fortunate enough to meet six of her penpals before they were deployed.

In his lecture, Silber compared the history of the consumer movement to women's history.

Math professor discusses study at Valentine Lecture

MELANIE SCHOENBECK

The audience turnout to hear Serge Lang, Yale mathematics professor and author, speak about "Political Opinions Passed Off as Science and Mathematics" was large enough to make it necessary to move to a larger lecture hall than originally planned.

Use of the chalkboard and a handout packet more than 50 pages thick, created a classroom format for the lecture, followed by a question-and-

Lang's case study keyed on the works of Samuel Huntington, although he mentioned other individuals.

"Lang is a very dynamic person," said Andy Bennett, assistant professor of mathematics. "He gets into something and runs at high-speed with whatever has his interest."

The Department of Mathematics was the host of the fifth annual Harry Valentine Lecture that placed Lang in the spotlight at K-State. Valentine's interests included the economic development of Kansas through enhancement of basic and the lecture series.

"The justification for my case is its importance, documented at many levels," Lang said in introduction. "I will be severely critical of a number of works, specific works, which are being put out and I will name names. The people whose names I will name are not here.

"I will talk about serious issues, which are open-ended in the responsibilities of the universities. In general, the sciences, the scientific eshments, journalism and politics," Lang said.

Lang said an example of Huntington's work discusses relationships in the form of equations - such as social frustration divided by mobility opportunities equals political participation. Huntington's various methods classify South Africa as a satisfied society.

"Huntington says, 'The term "satisfied" has to do with whether or not there are measurable signs that people are satisfied or not with their lot," Lang said.

"That lot may be good, fair, or awful; what this particular term is de-applied science, which is the basis of scribing is the fact that the people for some reason are not protesting it. When this study ... was done in the early 1960s, there had been no major riots, strikes, or disturbances (in South Africa). France, on the other hand, had just been through a constitutional crisis and an attempted coup d'etat."

Individuals examined the piece and raised several opinions and evaluations pertaining to the statement. If people are not happy, that does not mean they are going to protest, said a

"Huntington is not only incompetent in not knowing the history of South Africa, he is incompetent in not knowing what is in his own book," Lang said.

"Things that look like mathematics, but actually are not, are being used to get scientific certification by some people at the expense of others," Lang said.

Bennett said, "It is difficult for many people, particularly not technicat people, to jump up and down and say, 'Wait a second, that number is meaningless."

Mountain bikes versatile, popular

JODELL LAMER Collegian Reporter

Mountain bikes have become a familiar sight in Manhattan and on campus. They've become a popular form of transportation and recreation.

Dan Ereth, an employee of the Pathfinder, said a lot of the popularity of the bikes is due to the multi-purpose uses of the bikes.

"You can ride it off-road, run the trails and it is still going to be a durable bike," he said, "and you can still obviously ride it on-road."

Many different models of mountain bikes are available. They range from the city versions costing less than $300 to full-competition models costing $1,000 or more. The lower-priced city bikes are only supposed to receive limited offroad use. Cross bikes, lighter bikes with larger tires, have become popular in urban areas.

Ereth said many bikes sold in Manhattan are purchased to actually be ridden off-road.

"Introduction mountain bikes and the serious mountain bikes are being bought by students," he said. The popularity of the mountain bikes has led to a decrease in the sales of 10-speed-style road bikes. "The triathlon and bike racers still ride road bikes," said David Colburn, Pathfinder manager. The average bike consumer now either buys a mountain bike or a cross bike, Colburn said. Ereth said mountain bikes were first started by the bike company, Specialized, 12 years ago. Production has really grown in the last five

"Cross bikes on the coasts right now are tremendously popular, but around here we really haven't seen that big of a deal," he said.

Jon Rittgers, an employee of Aggie Bike Station, said those wanting to go off-road with their bikes should be ready to spend money on parts and service.

One scene in the play depicts a mother who was found practically insane with a dead child three days old and a nine-month-old daughter. The mother could not communicate what had happened to her, but began to tear the layers of her clothes and piece them together in a quilt.

She said she wanted her daughter to have it. Shortly after, the woman died. The daughter grew up with the quilt her mother made her as she

the need for fresh water. One student asked what was the biggest river there.

'Oh, we have no rivers. I really wish we did," she said laughing. She explained all the usable water is gulf water purified in a huge distillery, which was also destroyed during the war. Many Kuwaitis are still living without electricity as well. Kuwait has around 500 to 600 oil wells, all of which were set on fire, she said. Some fires are still burning, and experts estimate it will take up to two years to put all the fires out.

"I don't think it will take that long," she said. "This is the government's first priority, because nothing else can be accomplished until they get rid of all the dangerous smoke."

Al-Fulaij said the Kuwaiti govemment is doing everything it can to get the country back on its feet. This includes paying reparations to Kuwaitis for all war-related damages, and exchanging all pre-war currency, which is now worthless.

"Even as we speak they are making sure my children here in the United States have food on the table," she said. "The government takes care of everything. We have free medical care, schools and even sports clubs and different kinds of lessons, such as ballet and piano - for the even though she grew up in the United States, she is having more trouble adjusting to being back in Kansas than her husband or her children.

"The kids are occupied with school, and my husband has a woodworking job he keeps busy with, but I have trouble keeping occupied during the days."

She said she lives an active lifestyle in Kuwait, volunteering with the handicapped and being active with the American Embassy.

"With the embassy, it is my job to help out those who are new to Kuwait like I was when I first came here," she said.

Most Kuwaitis enjoy a comfortable lifestyle and everything, aside from the nomadic Bedouins in the desert, is Westernized, she said. Her husband had his own business.

"I will be frank — we are lucky. We live very well."

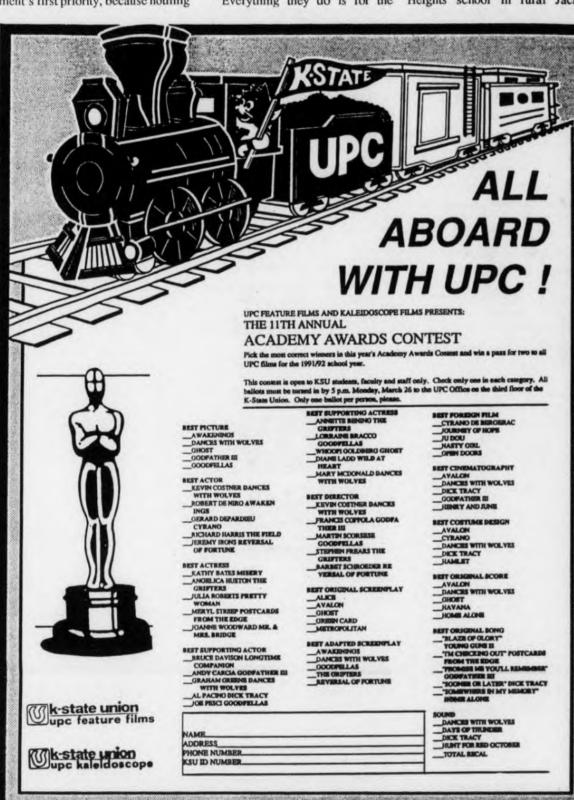

Al-Fulaij said she hoped one day to return to her home and her friends in Kuwait and was deeply saddened by the devastation caused by the war.

Salah Al-Fulaij plans to go back to Kuwait next week to begin picking up the pieces of his family's life. The family does not want to take their children back until the threat from the smoke is over, she said.

A billboard made by Humboldt citizens displays the names of soldiers who served in the gulf. Clayton Carpenter's name heads the list.

Carpenter mistaken as dead in Persian Gulf by U.S. Army

MIKE VENSO

Collegian Reporter

Reports of Pfc. Clayton Carpenter's death were greatly exaggerated.

Carpenter, a tank turret mechanic from Humboldt assigned to the 1st Cavalry Division, was one of the thousands of happy soldiers returning home from the Persian Gulf.

But Carpenter's story is a little different from most of the returning soldiers'. Carpenter had been listed dead for several days due to an error.

On the eve of the cease-fire, Carpenter's company was following Fort Riley's 1st Infantry Division as it made its way through the Iraqi desert along the Kuwati border.

When they were supposed to be only 5 miles into the Saudi-Iraq neutral zone and rendezvous at an allied camp, Carpenter and some other soldiers were separated from the rest of the convoy and ended up driving 30 miles into Iraqi territory.

"Everywhere you looked were Iraqi bunkers. We were locked and loaded," Carpenter said, describing the setting where the crew stopped to take a break.

That pit-stop proved to be a turning point in the 20-year-old's life. Some of Carpenter's group came across what appeared to be a spent shell from a bomb. In reality, it was a live bomblet that had fallen from an allied cluster bomb.

The men tried to see what it was when the cone-shaped bomb exploded in their hands.

"He looked at it and said it was an explosive at one time," Carpenter said. "He touched the fuse and it blew up. It killed two people.

"Something in me told me to turn away and I covered my head just as it went off," he said.

Carpenter was pelted with three large pieces of shrapnel in his hand and foot as he stood about five feet away from the blast.

"I felt something hit my foot, but didn't feel any pain," Carpenter said. "When I turned around, I didn't expect them to be there. One guy was already dead and the other's leg just fell down as I looked at him. I've never seen anyone die in front of my own eyes.

Carpenter was carried away by another soldier to wait for a Medevac helicopter.

"He let me call him every name in the book, to keep me from going into shock," he said. Carpenter was loaded into the helicopter about 20 minutes later and transported to a Mobile Army Surgical Hospital in Saudi Arabia.

He said he was there long enough for the hospital to get his name and change his bandages. He was then shipped to the 143rd Combat Hospital via ambulance.

"Mills is making his move. They're battling shoulder to shoulder. It's Mills of the USA, he won! He won!'

This is what the American public listening to the 1964 Olympic Games heard when Billy Mills won the gold medal in the 10,000-meter run. It was also heard Saturday in front of Anderson Hall by the crowd of runners just before the start of the Billy Mills

The race was put together by various K-State civil and greek organizations, said John Ryan, junior in premed, the race coordinator.

Mills attended the fun run and explained that the tape was the actual announcement of the final meters of the Olympic race - not from the movie "Running Brave."

"Running Brave" is a film based on the story of Mills' quest for Olympic success.

man in business administration, "He ran with everyone, and about half way through the race, he came back and shook hands with everybody."

Ryan said he got the idea to invite Mills to K-State when he was visiting a friend at Emporia State University last year, where Mills was featured at race.

"It took a whole year of work to get him here," Ryan said. "It took time to get the money together, and in the end there were about 20 sponsors involved."

The race cost participants $5 and the money raised will go to the March of Dimes, Ryan said.

The final count was more than 215 runners, and trophies were awarded to the fastest female and male runners. Jeanne Groth, junior preprofessional secondary education, and Rick Boyle, ESU student, were the winners.

"My friend John Ryan came to Emporia when Billy was there, so when Billy came to K-State, I decided to come here and visit John," Boyle said.

Some participants did come to compete for the trophy, but many ran just for fun.

"We saw fliers for the race and a couple of the guys in the house thought it would be a fun thing to do," said Paul Wagner, junior in construction science.

state tax plans face obstacles

Area legislators inform voters of budget revisions

CHRISSY VENDEL

Collegian Reporter

Area legislators gave an update of recent Legislative activities and difficulties as the Legislature heads into week 11 of its 13-week session. Sen. Lana Oleen, R-

Manhattan; Rep. Sheila Hoch-hauser, D-Manhattan; and Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, addressed a brunch sponsored by the Manhattan-Riley County League of Women Voters Saturday at Malo's restaurant.

The legislators said changes need to be made in the state tax system, but many difficulties will have to be overcome first.

"The issue is that we have to find the money to pay for structural difficulties the previous two Legislatures left us, in addition to this year's budget," Glasscock said.

"The system was centered around a reliance on property tax," he said. "We need to examine sales tax, and its capacity to offset property tax; and income tax, and its ability to fund the state."

Glasscock said the Legislature is coming to grips with its mission by scaling down original expectations of property tax relief.

"We started by saying we could relieve $500 million, but it will probably end up being around $150 to $200 million," he said. Another problem, Glasscock said, was that the Kansas tax system doesn't reflect the rate of growth in the state.

Hochhauser agreed and said the Legislature should consider raising income taxes because it would make the system more elastic.

"Income taxes would keep pace with inflation costs, which means the Legislature wouldn't have to piecemeal taxes every year," she

Hochhauser said a mix of taxes, sales taxes and property taxes, would be necessary because a pure income tax raise is not going

"There will be some (sales tax) exemptions closed, some professional services added and a modest increase in sales tax," she said.

Oleen said fund reliance does need to be transferred from property taxes to income taxes, but legislators representing richer counties are against such a shift.

"They've got larger populations, and therefore, more representatives and senators in Topeka, Oleen said. "They are there to protect their constituents, who would like to avoid increased income taxes.'

The House Taxation Committee is considering a proposal that would create a new income tax category for households making $75,000 a year and more, Oleen

"It could bring in an additional $109 million and bring taxes into a more equitable and timely fashion," she said. "People at the new level would only have to pay an additional $72 per year — I think. So it's not that exorbitant.

"The additional money would be used for vital education and social services programs."

Glasscock said the bad news about the proposal is it is attached to the military retirement bill.

"It should be an interesting debate on the floor," he said

Oleen also said there are sales tax exemptions that should be closed, but they need to be big enough to raise a significant amount of money.

Palestinian activists deported

JERUSALEM (AP) - Israel retaliated Sunday for a new wave of Arab knife attacks by ordering four Palestinian activists deported. Hard-liners called for even stronger measures.

Four Arab youths were wounded in clashes touched off in response to the expulsion orders, Arab reports said.

A Foreign Ministry official said the deportation order is meant as a warning to the leaders of the Palestinian uprising against Israeli occupation.

Those served with deportation orders are senior activists in the PLO's mainstream Fatah faction and all have been imprisoned for ordering and committing anti-Israeli violence, the army said.

The knifings began after 17 Palestinians died in police gunfire in a riot in Jerusalem last October. They have taken 16 Jewish lives, six in the past month.

In the past five days, one Israeli has been killed and five injured in five stabbings in central Israel. In Tel Aviv Sunday, a 16-year-old Palestinian died of a head wound suffered Friday when troops opened fire on stone-throwers in the Gaza Strip, the army said.

Desert floods result in 8 deaths

JERUSALEM (AP) - Desert flash floods swept two people to their deaths and six more died in road accidents blamed on heavy weekend rains, authorities said Sunday.

Saturday's torrential downpour was welcome after an unusually dry winter, but it flooded farmfields and swamped highways, cutting off the Red Sea port of Eilat from the rest of the country.

Mali soldiers fire on, kill protesters | Governor defends police chief

ABIDIAN, Ivory Coast (AP) - Soldiers fired on thousands of pro-democracy protesters in Mali Sunday, killing at least seven people, then blocked hospitals to stop the wounded from getting help, witnesses said.

Government opponents said troops had killed more than 150 people in three days of protests in Bamako, Mali's capital.

"The capital is running with blood," said Papa Coulibaly, an employee at the city's Gabriel Toure Hospital. He was contacted by telephone from the Ivory Coast.

"The protests are continuing, and the soldiers are still firing on the crowd," he said. "We're still hearing gunshots now."

Wife, lover linked to man's death

MONONGAHELA, Pa. (AP) - A man originally believed to have killed himself with a shotgun had taped his wife and teenage hunting partner plotting his death, investigators said.

The discovery of the tape two weeks after his death led state police to reopen the case and charge the purported lovers. John Dave Cassidy's body was dug up Thursday. Washington County Coroner Farrell Jackson scheduled a jury inquest Monday morning to reconsider his original ruling of suicide as the cause of Cassidy's death.

He was killed Feb. 13 by a shotgun blast to the head at his home in this former steel town south of Pittsburgh.

Mary Kay Cassidy, 29, was charged with criminal homicide March 11 after investigators were given an audio tape on which they said Cassidy, her husband since 1978, recorded her and David Bowers discussing the killing.

The runway lights flashed on, the band began and young women filled the stage sporting everything from cutoff blue jeans to sequin-

Jeannette Fitzgerald, senior in pre-medicine, won Miss Congeniality and Heather Anderson, senior in journalism and mass communications, won the interview competition.

Mistress of ceremonies, Kerry Tarrant, a two-time pageant winner, read the names of the top two contestants.

its feet as both girls embraced and outgoing Miss Manhattan/K-State, Vicki Train, and Tarrant brought out flowers and began to pin them on Anderson's crown.

"I really didn't think I was going to win," Anderson said. "I'm so happy to represent Manhattan, this is one of the best pageants in the state.

For Kristianne Cook, standing on stage knowing that either her or Anderson would win was far from comfortable.

Entrepreneurs club teaches through business ventures

SCOTT FOWLER

Collegian Reporter

Members of the K-State Association of Collegiate Entrepreneurs build a networking system, and promote and support student interest in starting businesses.

It's a national organization developed to promote entrepreneur activities at the college level, said John Bunch, assistant professor of management.

The club gives students a means and inspiration to start their own business ventures while they're in college," said Bryan Albers, junior in marketing and president of the association.

'Many students are concerned about the risk of starting their own business," Albers said. "ACE helps get them started by pointing them in the right direction.'

Andre Angle, junior in marketing and management and vice president of public relations for the association, said the club helps members learn as much as possible about business and get hands-on experience. Bunch said the group is striving to build relations with small businesses in Manhattan.

The association invites guest speakers such as Randy Martin, president of the Manhattan chamber of commerce, who spoke about the importance of community involvement and being fresh on what's happening

Although ACE is a collegiate group, Albers said some successful entrepeneurs in Manhattan become involved.

They give us advice as to what to look out for," he said.

Albers said his involvement in ACE has helped Digital Dynamics, a disc jockey service he helped start, because he has met a lot more people and developed a good networking Albers said the Association will co-sponsor a bartending class with Last Chance April 2.

He said information and demonstration classes will be on campus and hands-on work will be done at the bar. He said he expects about 100 students to enroll for the class.

The group established a contract with McCain Auditorium to run the concessions this semester, Angle said. Part of the profits were used to finance several members' trip to ACE's three-day International Convention in St. Louis.

Albers said they are developing a venture approval committee for student's who have a business or commercial idea.

He said the student writes a business plan and submits it to the committee. The committee would either accept the plan, refine it or suggest alternatives, he said.

"Lots of people have good ideas, but don't know how to start a business on their own," Albers said. "It's a great way to make sure people aren't getting off on the wrong foot."

Bunch said if the committee accepts the plan, it would become a sponsored activity.

Albers said he hoped the committee would be in full ride by the fall.

ACE is helpful to those students who have a desire to start a business because the association will bounce around and refine a student's idea, Angle said.

"We would like to end up with a group of movers and shakers on campus," Bunch said.

He said he would like the association to become a campus-wide forum of students from many other departments.

"The doors are open," he said. "Any student who has energy and is interested in a club that's going to be doing things is welcome to join." Through ACE, Angle has enjoyed getting to know other people with a similar interest, Bunch said. "Without the association there is no other way to meet other people who have the same ambitions. Five ACE members traveled to St.

Louis Feb. 21-23 to attend the international convention.

What do you call a cow without any legs? Ground beef! That somewhat corny joke proves there's more to comedy than the punchline and Bertice Berry, stand-up comedienne, knows what it takes.

The fact that Berry has a doctorate and has taught at Kent State University makes her a unique person to do stand-up comedy for a living, said

Russ Perez, staff adviser for the Union Program Council.

"I've seen her perform a couple of times, and I think she's hilarious," Perez said.

Berry travels around the United States performing at different colleges full-time.

Letter to Bob tells of American silence, noise

his is a letter to a K-State alumnus named Bob, who lives in New York, rides a Yamaha and listens to Texas blues and Rush.

I hear there are race riots in New York again. Have you been involved in these? I suppose not. The newspaper says these riots are flaring up in movie theaters where "New Jack City" is showing. Must be a good movie. Or a real bad one, and the tickets and the popcorn are too expensive. I had a guy cough on me at "The Doors," but movies are still only about $4.50 here, although buttered popcorn prices are skyrocketing. The girl at the counter said it was because of the war. I think she was lying, but you can never tell.

Ice-T is in "New Jack City," I'm told, although I haven't seen it and don't intend to. I'd be afraid he might rap. Yes, Bob, I still have my rap tapes, but the only ones I listen to anymore are the Digital Underground "Sex Packets" tape and the Beastie Boys' "Paul's Boutique.

Rap is dead and didn't even get a decent funeral. It was able to flourish because of the money pouring in from the white suburbs, but that's also why it died. It was only a matter of time before one of the white, rich teenagers tried to rap and made it. Vanilla Ice. What a joke, Bob. What a damned shame. I can't even listen to Queen and David Bowie's

"Under Pressure" without crying.

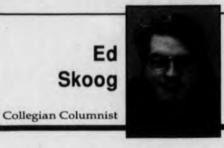

Stevie Ray Vaughn is dead too, but had a good send-up. Me and Skrzypek saw him in Kansas City several years ago. I admit I went mainly to see the Stray Cats, and they sucked. All comeback tours suck.

I was suprised by Stevie Ray Vaughn. I hadn't listened to him much, but he was pretty good. I was on KSDB when the news came of the helicopter crash. I played "Men in Helicopters" by Adrian Belew and "Surprise, You're Dead" by Faith No More. You know me, Bob. I never think before I speak.

Unlike you. There you are, in Manhattan, the real Manhattan, and I'm still in another Manhattan, a town so forgotten that it doesn't even make it as a joke in beef commercials. They choose Manhattan, Mont., or Manhattan, Miss. The advertising bigwigs must think Manhattan, Kan. isn't odd enough, which is surprising to those of us who are still here. We don't mind. We're not proud.

But we should be, I think. Since you and I think in terms of music, look at Manhattan, Kan. in that way. There's a bunch of good rock music coming out of here. Since you like Stevie Ray Vaughn so much, you'd probably like the Barnburners, but that's all either too tame or not tame enough for me. I don't have a mood to fit their sound. Good musicians,

It's TUBER for me, or Roach Factory or the Moving Van Goghs. These bands rival the signed and supposedly "hip" crap I hear on the radio, or see on MTV. You don't have to be big to be good. These bands have a powerful, subversive energy. A sense of incredible possibility surges from their sonic malestroms. You probably have something like this in New York, but, likely, it's predictably pretentious. You can't avoid it in a big city. You are at the disadvantage. New York couldn't handle a Truck Stop Love. The Flying Ravioli Boys are good, too.

I spend a lot of my time listening to music, or talking about it, as I know you do, Bob. I know I spend too much time doing it. I just got a new needle ($21) for my turntable, so I've been listening to songs off old records. You can't do that with a cassette, CD or 8-track. Aretha Franklin's "Soul Serenade" and "Drown in My Own Tears." "Psychotic Reaction," off the Drugstore Cowboy soun-track. "Night of the Thumposaurus Peoples," by Parliament. "Fat Bottomed Girls," by Queen. The good stuff you don't get to hear on the radio, and which I have never seen anyone buy on anything but an album.

I assume you are still listening to the same type of thing, as I am. You still have the motorcycle, of course. I admire motorcycles, and motorcyclists. The total freedom is amazing, which, combined with the everpresent danger, makes motorcycling the most thouroughly American activity ever.

Donald "Gypsy" Barger was killed in an accident near here a couple of weeks ago. I never knew him, but he must have been an amazing man. He was president of the Flatlanders chapter of the Veterans' Motorcycle Club. He was a decorated Vietnam veteran. There were 300 people from across America at the funeral. A friend and fellow rider of Barger's came into the newsroom a few days ago and straightforwardly thanked a photographer for the Collegian's story about Barger. I was struck by the man's honesty and confidence. I thought about how lucky he was, and about how much of life I was missing by sitting in class and watching my butt get flabbier from sitting so much.

You probably know more about it than I do. You are out of college and, if you are like you used to be, you ride constantly. Do you get out of the city much? I can only imagine how great it would be to ride a good Harley-Davidson — fast, very fast, and even faster than that - on a highway, faster than the clouds, past houses, farms and fields.

I've been thinking about solitude lately. Silence. It's funny, considering how much I have centered my life around music. I've al-ways thought if I listened enough, loud enough, I would get some answer to deep questions, that a way of life would be revealed to me in sustained feedback. Or some crap like that.

But it won't happen. Ranier Maria Rilke - a dead, white, German poet — wrote that one can find oneself only in solitude, and in part, that means silence. I can just imagine the great, wide silence I could find on a highway with a great, wide sky above me, as I sped past everything. Bob, can you find anything like that in New York?

rom the movies, it looks like everyone in your city is neurotic. If it is true, Bob, it's probably because of the noise. Maybe that's why people flock to big cities, because there is no silence there. Maybe that's why I drown out any inner noise with constant music. I press "repeat" on my CD player when I go to bed. And that's what I think about these days, Bob. I hope you are well. Don't put no beans up your

Sincerely, Still In College.

Ruling:

When abortion became legal, it made a statement about the welfare of unborn children. It said the decisions about unborn children must be left to those who conceive, bear and raise them.

Wednesday, the Supreme Court took it one step further and blocked employers from playing a part in that decision.

No longer must women choose to be sterilized to keep from losing their job. The Supreme Court ruled that fertile women who are exposed to dangerous substances in the work place cannot be forced out of their jobs or discriminated against in the hiring processes.

Called the "the strongest endorsement of women's rights in years," the decision was a result of a court majority that decided a woman's capacity to become pregnant should not be a factor in getting a job.

Companies will now have to

Court backs women's rights

take another look at their "fetal protection policies" and make any necessary changes to abide by the Supreme Court's ruling.

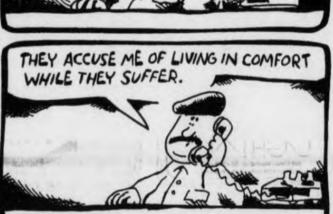

Many argue that companies are ethically obligated to protect unborn fetuses from potentially harmful substances. To do that, companies would have to ban all fertile women from dangerous jobs - which many have done. But not every fertile woman is going to have a child, and if she does, it is up to her to know the risks her job poses and decide for herself.

Because after all, that is what legal abortion is all about - a woman's right to choose.

And maybe women won't be the only winners in this case. Maybe employers will increase efforts to remove all workers from hazardous settings. A great victory for women may be a great victory for all

I experienced deja vu when I picked up Thursday's Collegian.

Wednesday was the 14th Annual Classified Employees Recognition Ceremony. Hundreds of people turned out for this prestigious event. And, for the second year in a row, coverage of the Miss Manhattan/K-State Pageant was on page one of the Collegian the next day. Not a single paragraph appeared in the paper on the classified affairs ceremony. I guess it is not going to change. I believe the attitude of the Collegian staff, year in and year out, is parochial. Some might argue that the newspaper is "for the students, by the students." Good. Well, could students imagine campus life without the K-State Union? Probably not. The Union employs 200 classified staff. What about printing services? Where would the paper be printed? Printing Services employs 28 classified staff. And what about Financial Aid? Dining halls? Dormitories? Facilities?

I have an idea. Design a course called "Campus Regional Geography." Stephanie Harvey

Collegian needs news

What ever happened to basic news reporting? You know, the who, what, where and Thursday I read with interest not one, but two stories about the upcoming Miss Manhattan/K-State Scholarship Pageant. What was I looking for? The names of the contestants, maybe their hometown or their specialties, something that would tell me whether I was interested in this particular event. What did I get? The standard twoquoted-sources story with a "different slant."

True, there was some background information, but it didn't tell me what I really wanted to know. Do I know any of the contestants? Are any of them from my old hometown? Might I want to attend because of that? I don't mean to pick on this reporter. His story approach was similar to most coverage I read in the Collegian, so I must assume that's what reporters are being taught. This isn't the first time I've tried to find news in a newspaper only to find fluff and filler. On March 29-31, the K-State rodeo will be on campus. If the following week's coverage is like years', I will not find the ranking of the participating teams, nor the winners in individual events.

This is something I will want to know, because the final scores of a collegiate rodeo cover totals from several performances. Because it takes time to calculate those final outcomes, the average rodeo spectator does not know for sure the overall winners when he leaves. It would be nice to find that follow-up information in the newspaper. Besides, would you cover a basketball game without including the final score and the top players?

Last year, I was out of town on the weekend of the University Open House and the Little American Royal. On Monday, I picked up a Collegian expecting to find out who had been selected top showman. Wrong. What I got was a nice semi-accurate side story, but no news of the outcomes. It was more like the comics with a "steer show" where not one steer was present.

Which brings me to another question. We have students studying agricultural journalism, is it possible for agriculture reporters to cover agriculture events?

I like a newspaper that has stirring editorials, entertaining columns, interesting human interest stories, useful classifieds, funny funnies and classy advertising. But please, also give me the news.

Students uninvited

On March 8, Madeline Hunter lectured in Forum Hall from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Hunter teaches at the University of California in Los Angeles and is a very respected educational theorist, who has a wide following in the field. Her lecture was sponsored by the Council for Public School Improvement.

The students of education at K-State were not invited to attend, even though our teachers stress the Hunter model in our studies. I went anyway and found the experience to be very beneficial and one that all education majors should have had.

Why weren't we invited to attend? Space was not a factor, because there were about 200 people in the audience, but the hall will seat 576.

Hunter apparently charges a high fee, and my understanding is members paid $40 and non-members paid $80. Of course, most of those in attendance were affiliated with school districts, which probably paid their registration fees. Students cannot afford to pay those prices, but might have managed a student fee of $5 or $10.

When a non-University organization uses K-State facility to present a program, it seems only logical that K-State students who are interested should be invited to attend at no charge, or at a modest fee, simply because this is an institution of learning.

Of the 16,500 law enforcement agencies, the Riley County Police Department is now one of 168 in the nation, and the first in Kansas, to receive accreditation.

Alvan Johnson, director of the RCPD, said the department applied for accreditation to the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement in 1985.

It has taken six years for the department to achieve accreditation, Johnson said. Some staffs are able to get it done in two or two and a half years, but because of various changes throughout the years, Riley County wasn't able to make that time

"Over the past year, we've worked hard, and efforts were very intense," Johnson said.

A mock onsight inspection was conducted by officers from accredited departments in July 1990, Johnson said.

Larry Woodyard, assistant director of the RCPD, said after policies had been reviewed, several were rewritten and the staff of 125 received a brief retraining session.

Woodyard said by working intimately with the standards, it is easy to lose objectivity.

"It would have been very difficult sitive, Johnson said. to get accredited without the mock onsight inspection," he said.

The commission's team came the first week in December for the inspection of Riley County's department, Johnson said. It took the full week because every policy was inspected and followed through the different departments to see if Riley County complied with the rules.

There are 908 accreditation standards. The number that a given department has to meet depends on its size, Johnson said. Riley County surpassed their quota and met nearly 800 standards.

The commission also interviewed Riley County residents on police performance, and the feedback was po-

This month a team of seven from Riley County went to Denver for the final hearings, Johnson said. The board reviewed the reports from December and gave the department its accreditation.

The board is made of several different professions, from sociologists, police detectives to senators, John-

"Awakenings" was a great film, but it isn't nominated for many Oscars this year. Its main fault is that it's another one of those movies that tugs at the old heart strings. Academy voters probably won't let another "Driving Miss Rain Man" win for a while. "The Godfather Part III" doesn't come close to its predecessors, and "Ghost" is trash.

'GoodFellas" is the movie that should win, and the only other one that has even the slightest chance. It was given Best Picture by the New York Film Critics Circle, the Los Angeles Film Critics Association, and the National Society of Film Critics.

Unfortunately, the box office receipts for "GoodFellas" were extremely low when it was released last year. Then, when its studio re-released it this year to heighten its profile for the Oscars, it was once again ignored by ticketbuyers. Damn shame.

SRS offers help with heating bills

VICKE KNIGHT

Collegian Reporter

If you're having trouble paying your heating bill from this winter, help may be available. The Low Income Energy Assistance Program offered through the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services is designed to do just Kim Hamilton, program technician, said the program, offered through SRS, assists people with paying winter heating bills.

To be eligible for LIEAP, adult income in the houshold must meet state guidelines. Some payments must have been made in two of the last three months, and the applicant must have an obligation to provide the heat in the living arrangement.

People can call or pick up applications from the SRS office, she said. The application must be returned with proof of energy payments and

"We verify information with Kansas Power and Light," Hamilton said. SRS also checks with landlords to find out if the applicant pays energy bills directly to a landlord.

Hamilton said the information is placed into a computer and goes to Topeka, and checks are send directly to those who have been accepted.

Those with disconnect notices are taken as a priority, Hamilton said. Priorities may also result from the type of fuel used.

The SRS office tries to inform people about the program by putting posters up at the Kansas job service office, the Riley County Health Department, Big Lakes Developmental Center and grocery stores in the community, Hamilton said.

Barbara Dunlap, SRS chief of income maintenance for the Manhattan area, said some form of the program has been around since 1976. She said the LIEAP program slowly evolved and has been around now for more than seven years.

The program also exists in the summer. Dunlap said it is expected to start about July 10 and continue until August 30.

Dunlap said the summer program is restricted to those with heat-related illnesses, the elderly and the disabled.

Dunlap said she believes in the program - it helps out people who have incomes but still need help.

SPORTS MONDAY

Baseball team splits 4-game series with KU

DAVID SVOBODA

Sports Editor

You could break the weekend of baseball into two parts: Friday night and everything that followed.

For K-State and its visitors from the University of Kansas, the result of a wild, wacky, windy weekend of diamond doings at Frank Myers Field was a four-game split.

A total of 71 runs were scored in the final three games of the series, with batting averages and RBI totals soaring right along with earned run averages.

That craziness all came after a 3-2, 10-inning Wildcat win Friday night in a game that defined the essence of the game of baseball.

As far as the impact the games had on the Big Eight race, it was minimal, really, though the Wildcats could speak of a slight advantage.

By winning the scheduled nineinning contest Friday night, the Wildcats gained the all-important ish the season tied with KU in the Big mound, however, and left in the Eight standings, K-State would get the nod in any seeding question.

"It was just one of those series we just couldn't get any control of," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "There just wasn't any stability in any facet of our game.

K-State is now 18-11 overall and 2-2 in the Big Eight. KU is 14-10 and

A recap of each of the four games in the series follows:

Sunday's KU win

KU used an eight-RBI, two-homer effort from first baseman Jeff Nemeier to hand K-State a 17-13 defeat.

After falling behind early 8-3, the Wildcats put eight runs on the board in their half of the sixth to go up 11-8. Key blows in the inning came from Lance Wilson, who had a two-run homer, and Chris Hmielewski, who had a run-scoring triple.

fourth trailing 6-1

Protecting the 11-8 lead going into the eighth, reliever Dave Christensen, 3-4, walked the first two batters. With the bases loaded, he walked in a run, and the next batter Nemeier — unloaded for a grand slam over the left field wall to give KU a 13-11 lead.

Starter Eric Stonecipher, 3-4, went the distance for KU, despite allowing 11 runs and 13 hits.

KU coach Dave Bingham said his strategy was to go the distance with Stonecipher, and he was determined to stay with it.

'Our game plan was to stick with Stonecipher for the entire game, and there were a couple of times in which he tested my patience," Bingham said. "But I said, 'no, this is our game plan, and we're going to stick with was," Bingham said. "He threw somewhere around 160 pitches, and most of them were good pitches."

Saturday's split

In the opening game of Saturday night's doubleheader, KU scored eight runs in the seventh off three different K-State relievers to take an 11-3 win.

The Jayhawks had four doubles and a triple in their 11-hit attack. Designated hitter Mike Bard had two hits and three RBIs for KU.

In the second game, K-State climbed up off the deck to earn a 15-12 win in a contest as exciting as any played at Myers in recent memory.

Trailing 12-3 going into the bottom of the third, K-State rallied for seven in the third and four in the fourth to erase the seemingly insurmountable deficit en route to the win.

"Our kids showed so much heart,"

Clark said. "Anybody else would have quit.

"It was 12-3, we'd just been blown out in a big game just before ...

A big reason the Wildcats were able to get the win was the pitching of Brett Bock, 1-1, who was masterful in his four innings of work, allowing just one hit and striking out four. "Brett is a great kid," Clark said.

"He's stayed after it. "He's a walk-on, and he's the last guy we made a decision on to dress (for the series)."

Friday's 10-inning 'Cat win

Saturday's big comeback was an exciting offensive show, to be sure, but baseball purists had to appreciate Friday's 3-2 K-State win even more.

Kansas, behind starter Curtis Schmidt's eight strikeouts, led 2-0 going into the ninth.

But there, unlikely hero Larry Peddy stroked a game-tying hit to send the game into extra innings. In the 10th, catcher Jeff Ryan poked a game-winning single through the KU infield to give K-State the early series edge.

The effort was all Clark could take, since he entered the series fighting off a bad cold.

"I'm on medication, and I'm glad I was because I don't know what my heart rate would have been otherwise," Clark said after the comeback. "I haven't been around many better ballgames than that one."

Starter Kent Hipp struck out a career-best 12 men before departing in the 10th. Dan Driskill, 3-1, worked the 10th to get the win.

"Hipp was just awesome," Ryan said of his battery mate. "He just hits his spots real well and is a battler out

Ability to rally helps baseball team, hurts it

En route to a 2-2 start in the Big Eight baseball race, K-State baseball coach Mike Clark has had to rely on some magic tricks to keep his team alive at times.

In game one of the four-game weekend series, the 'Cats were down 2-0 going into their half of the ninth.

Reserve player Larry Peddy, with runners at first and third and one out, delivered a game-tying hit to center. It was onto extra innings, where Jeff Ryan stroked a single with Craig Wilson on third for the game-winner

After dropping the second contest, which KU claimed by an 11-3 score, the magic was there again.

But, with the wind blowing out at Frank Myers Field, baseballs can take off as often as Patriot missiles did during the recent conflict in the Persian Gulf.

It's the comeback mentality, though, that has Clark worried a

"It's good to know that we can come back at times," Clark said. "But on the other side of that, we've put ourselves into some holes that we just can't get out of."

In the third game, K-State seemed to be in a big hole and all but buried. After 21/2 innings of play, the Jayhawks were chirping loudly with a runs over the next three innings of play and settle down the KU bats for a heart-pounding 15-12 win.

"This team showed a bunch of heart in this win," Clark said after the third game.

K-State once again seemed to have some magic in the bats on Sunday. Trailing 8-3 going into the bottom of the sixth, the 'Cats rallied for eight runs on the strength of six hits, including a two-run jet stream of a homer by Lance Wilson.

However, K-State and pitcher Dave Christensen's arm ran out of magic. KU rallied for for nine more runs in the final two innings - five in the eighth and four in the ninth to win the contest.

Although dooming his pitcher's ERA, KU skipper Dave Bingham decided to stick with starter Eric Stonecipher.

"Most of the time he threw good pitches, but K-State got their sticks on a few of them. We knew that we could win with him, though," Bingham said.

"We got lucky in that we got to their bullpen a little bit early," Bingham added. "Their starting pitcher (Chris Hmielewski) just wasn't hitting the corners with his breaking ball, and all we had to do was hit the fastball, and that's our team strength.'

More than 91,000 people saw it. Undoubtedly, some knew what it was. Equally certain was that some didn't.

The World League of American Football opened Saturday with three games, and let it be forever recorded that the first points were on a safety by a second-string nose tackle named Chris Williams. Frankfurt 2, London

The London Monarchs wound up winning 24-11 as Stan Gelbaugh's 96-yard scoring pass to Jon Horton fueled a 17-point third quarter. There was a mixed crowd of Americans and Germans numbering 23,619 at Frankfurt, where hotdogs were replaced by bratwurst and "howdy" was replaced by "guten tag."

In the other two games, the Montreal Machine beat the Birmingham Fire 20-5, and the Sacramento Surge beat the Raleigh-Durham Skyhawks 9-3. In Sunday's game, the Barcelona Dragons beat the New YorkNew Jersey Knights 19-7.

Frankfurt coach Jack Elway admitted play was a little ragged, but the offenses would catch up to the defenses as the 10-game regular season wore on

"It's going to be a very sucessful venture," he said.

Besides the obvious football, the WLAF opener also featured several forms of Americana, including cheerleaders, a rock 'n' roll halftime show and German football neophytes wearing Yankee caps and Lakers

The league's first offensive points were on a 35-yard field by Stephan Maslo of Frankfurt, one of the team's three German players.

There were about 53,000 at Birmingham's Legion Field, and the start of the game had to be delayed 21 minutes to let all the people in.

"I never dreamed of anything like this," the Fire's principal owner, Gavin Maloof, said. Many of the fans were old hands at

By the Associated Press

NEW YORK - Although Oklahoma has beaten Colorado 23 consecutive times, Sooners coach Billy Tubbs said he doesn't think the streak will affect their semifinal game in the National Invitation Tournament. "It doesn't matter if you have seven girls in a row, there's a 50-50 chance the next one will be a boy," Tubbs said.

The Big Eight rivals will meet for the third time this season Monday night at Madison Square Garden.

Oklahoma won the two regularseason games, 113-97 in Norman and 69-68 in Boulder.

"You can throw out the first two games, because we're both playing better now," Colorado coach Joe Harrington said. "We know each other pretty well, so there shouldn't be any surprises.

Massachusetts (20-11) plays Stanford (18-13) in the other NIT semifinal. The Minutemen barely made it to the final four, winning three tournament games by a total of nine points. In the last round, they hit a threepointer at the buzzer to force overtime and went on to beat Siena 82-80. "My team hasn't slept since that " Massachusetts coach John Calipari said. "They're afraid if they wake up, the dream will be over. Stanford finished in a five-way tie for fifth place in the Pac-10, but has looked impressive in its NIT victories over Houston, Wisconsin and Southern, Illinois. 'We've had a rollercoaster year,' Coach Mike Montgomery said. "It's been a bit of an odyssey for us, but the ending is nice. Colorado (18-13) hasn't beaten Oklahoma (19-14) since 1982, but this will be their first meeting outside Big Eight territory.

Losing two of three doubles matches to finish the day proved fateful for the tennis team in Saturday's home duel with Wichita State.

After splitting with the Wildcats in singles competition, the Shockers gained a 5-4 advantage with wins at No. 2 and No. 3 doubles. The Shockers' victory, their first over K-State since 1986, dropped the Wildcats to 3-14 on the season.

"I was disappointed that we didn't have more players playing up to what they're capable of," Coach Steve Bietau said. "As a team, we didn't stick with business long enough."

Michele Riniker and Thresa Burcham defeated Giancarla DiLaura and Colleen van den Heever in No. 1 doubles 6-1, 6-4, but the other two doubles teams fell to the Shockers by scores of 6-4, 6-4. Karen Theck and Kim Sweeney

Jayhawks to face North Carolina in Final

Friends Williams, Smith to battle Tar Heels, Blue Devils join field

By the Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. - The last time Roy Williams was involved in a Final Four he was sitting next to Dean Smith.

He's going back to the national semifinals for the first time as a head coach and he will be seated across from Dean Smith.

The Kansas Jayhawks earned their ninth trip to the Final Four Saturday with a 93-81 victory over Arkansas in the Southeast Regional final.

It's the first for Kansas since 1988. Williams' last year as an assistant to Smith and the season the Jayhawks capped with a national championship.

Kansas now gets North Carolina, the East Regional champion after beating Temple 75-72 Sunday, in the national semifinals and it will the Tar Heels' first trip to the Final Four since winning it all in 1982. The questions about student and teacher were headed Williams' way before the last cord of net was snipped and hung around the necks of Alonzo Jamison, the regional's MVP, and point guard Adonis

"I'll watch the game with a great amount of interest and I would watch it regardless of what happened today because every bit of success that Roy Williams has in basketball is directly related to Dean Smith," Williams said Saturday of Sunday's game.

"I'm not going to watch the game any differently. If Coach and I are on the golf course playing against each other we're going to try and compete and beat the other one. We both understand that.

'I'll pull like the dickens for them to win and if that happens, it's good news and bad news. If they win the game, now we're playing in the semifinals and that means one of has to lose, and that's going to be very disappointing.

"At the same time, one of us is going to win and one of us is going to be in the finals. So it's a little bit of a mixed bag, but once the game starts I won't be thinking about that."

Smith said he had trouble watching his alma mater Saturday.

'I was excited for Coach Williams and the KU program, that is my old school, but mainly for Roy," Smith said. "He's done a fabulous job and I was a nervous wreck watching the game Saturday.

"I talked to him once this week and (assistant) Coach (Bill) Guthridge, who was Roy's freshman coach at North Carolina, had an idea for Arkansas, but we liked his better. Smith agreed with Williams' assessment of meeting a close friend in such an important game. "The nice thing about playing someone who is like a brother is that if you do lose, you certainly go home happier," Smith said. Kansas won its fifth straight regional championship game the same way the Jayhawks put together their

26-7 season: with a balanced offense and a tenacious defense. Unlike their first three tournament victories when the Jayhawks got off to good starts, the Arkansas game was bad for Kansas in the first half -

Arkansas led 17-6 six minutes in, but the Jayhawks went on to take a 29-27 lead 10 minutes later.

It got bad again when the Razorbacks went on a 15-0 run on the way to a 47-35 halftime lead, a 34-point swing from Kansas' halftime lead against Indiana in the regional

It started to look like Kansas' lackof-respect speeches for the past week had run out of effectiveness. Arkansas is a team which knows how to keep a lead as shown by the Razorbacks' 20-point average margin of

But something happened and it was more than a fiery halftime talk from Williams.

"I think when we scored eight quick points at the start of the second half they gave us some respect," Jamison said in bringing up the "R" word after he scored a career-high 26 points on 11-for-14 shooting. "I think I did play pretty well on offense.'

The defense wasn't too shabby either as the Jayhawks used a group effort to hold Todd Day to just five points in the second half after he had 21 in the opening 20 minutes.

"They didn't do anything different. The shots we took just weren't falling," said Day, who was 6-for-8 in the first half and 2-for-11 in the second. "In the first half everything I threw up went in and the second half was just one of those nights.'

Kansas' best shooting may have come from the free throw line. The Jayhawks entered the NCAA tournament with the worst free throw percentage of the entire 64-team field:

That changed against Arkansas (34-4) when they went 26-for-33, including making 16 of their last 17 during the final five minutes.

North Carolina and Duke, whose campuses are just a long jog apart, will be sharing a new neighborhood next weekend in Indianapolis.

The Atlantic Coast Conference rivals advanced to the Final Four Sunday, giving the league half of the NCAA semifinal field for the second straight year.

North Carolina held off tenacious Temple 75-72 for the East Regional championship, ending Dean Smith's longest absence from the Final Four and making him the first coach to get there in four different decades.

Duke defeated St. John's 78-61 for the Midwest title, joining UCLA and Cincinnati as the only schools to make four consecutive Final Four appearances.

The victories set up intriguing semifinal matchups next Saturday at the Hoosier Dome.

The Blue Devils (30-7) will play top-ranked UNLV (34-0) in a rematch of last year's championship game, a 103-73 rout by the Runnin' Rebels. North Carolina (29-5) meets Kansas (26-7) in a pupil-teacher showdown between Dean Smith and former assistant Roy Williams. The Final Four also had two ACC teams last year, Duke and Georgia

King Rice hit four free throws in the last 22 seconds and Temple's Mark Macon missed a potential, game-tying three-pointer with four seconds left, putting North Carolina in the Final Four for the first time since winning the national title in

"Maybe now I won't get any letters asking why I hadn't been to the Final Four," said Smith, who lost four consecutive regional finals after winning his first seven. "I can hardly remember the last time we made it. I'm pleased for the seniors who haven't been there before."

Although his team lost, Macon wasn't haunted by his humiliating 6-for-29 performance in the 1988 East Regional final, which took place on the same court in East Rutherford, Smith moved into a tie with UCLA's John Wooden for most career victories in the NCAA tournament. Smith's tourney record is 47-21; Wooden was 47-18.

Rick Fox and Hubert Davis led North Carolina with 19 points each. Mik Gilgore had 18 for Temple (24-10).

A 12-3 run by Temple pulled the Owls within two points with 11:47 remaining, but the Tar Heels countered with a 9-3 spurt to extend the lead to 61-53.

Temple, trying to join 11th-seeded LSU in 1986 as the only double-digit seeds to reach the Final Four, stayed close down the stretch but could never overtake North Carolina.

Duke 78, St. John's 61

At Pontiac, Mich., Bobby Hurley scored 20 points and ran the Duke offense brilliantly as the Blue Devils advanced to the Final Four for the fifth time in six years.

"I see a killer," St. John's coach Lou Carnesecca said. "He makes the other guys look better. He hits the 3s:

he's smart.' The Blue Devils will be making their ninth overall trip to the national semis, but they've never gone all the way. That's a record for Final Four UCLA made 10 straight Final Four appearances from 1967-76, winning eight times, and Cincinnati was there five straight years from 1959-63, winning twice.

Duke raced to a 40-27 halftime lead Sunday and was never threatened. The Blue Devils are 28-0 this season when leading at halftime.

Hurley made 6 of 10 shots from the field, including 4 of 7 from 3-point range. The 6-foot sophomore also had four assists and four steals with only one turnover and even led his team in rebounding with seven.

Christian Laettner scored 19 points for Duke, while Malik Sealy got 19 for St. John's (23-9). St. John's was plagued by poor shooting, injury and foul trouble in the first half and never recovered.

St. John's point guard Jason Buchanan had problems guarding Hurley, and picked up his third foul with 12 minutes left in the first half. He sat for the rest of the half as the Redmen made 16 of their 26 turnovers.

Robert Werdann, the Redmen's center, played little after the first eight minutes due to a leg injury, finishing with four points and seven

The 1990-91 version of the Kansas Jayhawk basketball team is a fun group to watch - even for a K-State graduate.

And that group is about to make the journey of a lifetime, to Indianapolis and the Final Four.

And, rest assured, this team deserves to be in Indy. Coach Roy Williams' bunch steamrolled Indiana and gave Arkan-

Bet they don't.

But they soon will, thanks to a fantastic coach and a group of players who refuse to believe they can be beaten by mere mortals.

Just who are these nobodys? These guys are better than even Danny and the Miracles, thank you. Danny Manning was an All-American, remem-

Randall is a fifth-year senior who exemplifies the term "Kansas basketball" Williams bandies about so freely. He passes the basketball with precision rarely seen from a big man, and his deft ballhandling and shooting skills make him a player's player.

Terry Brown: He's the longrange bomber - the cut-out-yourheart guy. When Brown raises up for his patented trey, hearts on the opposing sideline sink while those on his side race.

He's an ignitor of the first order. Adonis Jordan: He's simply the best sophomore guard in America. Strong statement? Maybe, but he's the floor leader who has KU

During the week preceding the K-State Rodeo, the K-State Union will sponsor Rodeo Days.

Rodeo Days is a week of events that lead up to the rodeo, which starts today and continues through Friday.

"The Union Program Council started Rodeo Days last year to become involved with the Rodeo Club and the K-State Rodeo," said Jeni Cardin, UPC program adviser. "The UPC decided to have activities and music with a rodeo theme for Rodeo Days. A representative from the Rodeo Club helped with the planning.'

At noon today Twang and Plink Inc., a traditional string band, will perform in the Union Courtyard.

The Rodeo Queen candidates will speak at noon Tuesday in the Union Courtyard about the effect rodeo has had on their lives.

"Speaking at the Union allows the contestants to practice their speeches for the actual competition at the end of the week," said Penny Garrett, Miss Rodeo K-State 1990. "These contestants come from all over the central plains region, which is Kansas and Oklahoma. The speech may be on anything to do with rodeo or current events. Sometimes the speech may take the form of a song, poem or skit."

Rio, a country and western band, will perform at noon Thursday in the Union Courtyard.

Jennie Dieball, a contemporary country entertainer, will perform at noon Friday in the Union Station.

There will be carriage rides through the K-State campus from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday. Tickets will be available at the UPC Special Events table outside the Union Stateroom for $1 per person.

Throughout the week, there will be a table set up outside the Union Stateroom where tickets for the rodeo can be purchased. The Rodeo begins at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and 1:30 p.m. Sunday in Weber

We need this building so that we can become competitive in research," Warner said.

Warner said he came back to K-State 1988, after a five-year absence, because he thought Thockmorton was going to be expanded.

"I just hope my judgment wasn't wrong," Warner said.

Authorization for all the money should be done this Legislative session and bids for the contract should be bid next winter or spring.

By bonding $2 million, construction could begin, and K-State would have a two- to three-year window to raise its part of the money, Woods said. That part of the money would be used for movable and fixed equipment in the building.

The building would be ready for use in 1994 or 1995, Woods said.

Nothing could have been further from the truth. Clayton Carpenter was alive, but his family and the community in Humboldt were grieving his death.

The morning of Feb. 27, Carpenter's father, Cecil, was working at the sewer plant when his boss told him to go to City Hall.

Cecil Carpenter and a co-worker drove across town and went inside. "It was a strange way all the office gals stood there and didn't say a

Cecil Carpenter was at a friend's house in Humboldt March 1 when army officers came to visit him again.

Billy Mills, a Native American and winner of the 10,000-meter run in the 1964 Olympic Games, was the keynote speaker for the 2nd Annual Students in Health symposium keynote address at 1:00 p.m. Saturday in the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

More than 70 K-State students, faculty and Manhattan residents attended the symposium.

Diana Caldwell, coordinator for multicultural organizations, introduced Mills to the audience.

"In the 92-year history of the Olympic Games, only one American has ever won the gold medal in the 10,000-meter run," Caldwell said. "Billy Mills is the first and only American to ever win this event.

Caldwell said Mills was a Sioux born on the Pine Ridge Reservation and a member of the Lakota tribe.

He became involved in sports and won an athletic scholarship to the University of Kansas.

He ran the 10,000-meter and the marathon throughout his collegiate. career and later qualified for the 1964 Olympic Games.

"In the 1964 Olympic Games, his chances to win either event were 1 in a 1,000," Caldwell said. "Overcoming these odds, Billy won the 10,000-meter run at the 1964 Toyko Olympics, creating one of the greatest upsets in Olympic

After the introduction, the audience listened to the TV broadcast and watched a film of his gold medal win in the Olympics.

Area firefighters battled a grass fire fanned by 25-mph winds across two and a quarter miles of open range Monday.

The fire began in an area about a half-mile north of the intersection of Kimball and Anderson Avenues to about a mile south of Tuttle Creek Units from the Riley County Rural, Fort Riley and Pottawatomie County fire departments fought the flames as it spread to threaten the Top of the World and Eagle Ridge residential areas.

The fire also damaged grassland in the K-State

Range Research Unit.

At about 3 p.m. Monday, the fire had reached the south side of Marlatt Avenue, which runs along the southern edge of the Range Research Unit.

Igniting trees along the gravel road, flames spread across Marlatt Avenue to the dry grass beyond. Within 10 minutes, the fire had spread a quarter-mile north of Marlatt Avenue.

By about 4 p.m., firefighters thought they had the fire extinguished, but the wind fanned smoldering hot spots and rekindled the blaze. One firefighter covered by soot and dirt and refilling water trucks on Marlatt Avenue said, 'That's what we're fighting now, rekindle." He said the rekindled blaze had again ignited near its first place of origin and was spread north by the

At about 5 p.m., even the rekindled fire appeared to be extinguished.

Financial aid plan may alter process

Student loan, grant allocation discussed

VICKI KNIGHT

Collegian Reporter

Proposals now being considered in the U.S. Congress may affect students applying for financial aid in 1992 and thereafter.

Congress is considering the proposed reauthorization plan for student aid submitted by the Bush administration.

Larry Moeder, K-State acting director of financial aid, said the proposal's main goal is to provide more money to the neediest students by removing as many as 600,000 students from middle-income backgrounds from the Pell program.

Changes would reduce the loan burden on low-income students by making more grants available for them.

One proposal, which would begin in fall semester of 1992, would increase the maximum Pell Grant to $3,700 a year from the current maximum of $2,300. Moeder said this would increase grants for families with incomes below $20,000, but reduce or eliminate grants for families above $20,000.

This would reduce the number of loans low-income families have to pay back and reduce the volume of deficits on student loans.

"Currently, students graduate with large loan debts, facing monthly payments they can't handle." he said. "Reducing the amount of debt students are involved in, in turn, will reduce the amount of defaults."

It is hoped the proposal will put faith back into the Stafford Loan program. K-State's default rate is 5 percent, however, Moeder said some proprietary instituions have close to a 50-percent default rate.

He said some version of the proposal will pass because subcommittees in both the House and the Senate are considering similar measures. The measures are expected to be voted on early next year.

Annita Huff, assistant interim director of financial aid, said the proposal indicates government is trying to assist those individuals who don't have resources available for higher education.

However, she said the majority of the responsibility for those expenses should fall on the families, not the government.

Other changes proposed include shifting administrative costs from the federal government to educational institutions, she said. Currently, the institution provides 15 percent of the funding. That would change to 50 percent if the proposal is accepted.

Universities may have the added private lenders, Huff said. The change would be an attempt to reduce administrative and default costs to the program. Changes in determining indepenresponsibility of administrating Staf-ford Loans, a job now being done by dent status are also being considered, she said. Currently, one is considered independent if he or she has earned $4,000 per year for the last two years, isn't claimed as a dependent on another person's tax return and is at least 24 years of age.

Families that have concerns about their eligibility or future eligibility should be contacting their congressional representative with their ideas.

> -Larry Moeder Acting director of financial aid

Under the proposed changes, an applicant would need to have earned $5,300 a year for one year, not be claimed as a dependent and at least be 26 years of age.

To finance the increased costs of the Bush administration's proposals, aid would be cut off for students attending institutions with a high loan default rate and to students in the bottom 10 percent of their college

Meoder said the second proposal would be a problem because most colleges don't rank students, they just give them a GPA.

Huff doesn't think the ranking system will pass because it is unfair.
"What the bottom 10 percent is of one college may not be the same as the bottom 10 percent of another," she said.

Meoder said the Senate also is looking at ways to assist middleincome families.

In the past, middle-income families used Stafford loans, but the last reauthorization changed that by shifting the Stafford loan down to low-income families, he said. That shift blocked middle-income families from financial aid programs, he

The proposals would change the mixture of students that receive aid, so that low-income students will rely on grants instead of loans for their financial aid, and higher income students would rely on loans.

Meoder said now is the time for those concerned to voice their opinions.

'Families that have concerns about their eligibility or future eligibility should be contacting their congressional representative with their

State divides money between KU, K-State

BETSY HIDALGO Collegian Reporter

The battle between the University of Kansas and K-State for state construction funds is not the direct competition some students believe it to

"I think the state plays favorites to KU," said Megan Mullikin, sophomore in journalism and mass communications. "Just because KU is bigger and does really well in basketball does not mean they deserve more funding."

This is the belief of some students at K-State. The understanding of the way the system works is not apparent, she said.

"If certain facts on the way the funding is distributed between the two schools are looked at, then sure, it may look like KU receives more." said Lee McQueen, director of architecture and engineering services. "It is determined by more than enrollment. There are a lot of variables involved.'

Kansas supplies money to all of the Kansas Board of Regents schools. The amount of money given to each school is prioritized by the state and allocated accordingly.

"If Pittsburg State has a big project going on, and the state decides to fund it, then the rest of the schools might have to wait a year until their projects are funded," he said. "All of the money for the regents schools comes out of the same pocket."

A project plan is submitted to the regents. This includes the amount of money received in the immediate past and a request for the money needed to complete the project over a certain number of years.

State benefits and reasons for the funding are also explained to the regents, McQueen said.

"KU and K-State both receive between $5-7 million each year from the state," he said.

A five-year plan will be submitted to the regents within the next couple of months regarding the proposed expansion of Throckmorton and improvements to Farrell Library, McQueen said.

"Throckmorton is No. 1 on our priority list, and the library is No. 2," he said. "We have worked hard to be in the position to request this money.

tired, hungry refugees flee

By the Associated Press

SAFWAN, Iraq - The Iraqi military has recaptured every major city in southern Iraq, according to resistance fighters and refugees who fled to U.S. military outposts Monday seeking food, shelter and asylum.

Tired, hungry and dirty, the refugees said they had escaped from Basra, Najaf, Nasiriya and other southern cities as Saddam Hussein's troops crushed anti-government activity with tanks, helicopters and heavy artillery.

The official Iraqi news agency, monitored in Cyprus, reported Monday that Vice President Taha Yasin Ramadan had visited Karbala and met with Hussein Kamal, Saddam's son-in-law who is minister of industry and military industrialization, and other high officials.

Ramadan urged reconstruction efforts to wipe out traces of the rebellion, it said.

The rebels in the south, made up mostly of Shiite Muslims, have lost control of all the larger cities and towns they controlled as recently as March 15, the refugees said. Fighting continued in northern

Mother confesses to killing baby

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A missing name tag led hospital staff to give a baby girl to the wrong mother, who later confessed to killing her, a health official said Monday.

The mother, Somsri Jaita, 20, was quoted in the Monday edition of the Nation newspaper as saying she suffocated the baby, who was blind, because she did not think she could raise her.

The mother came to Bangkok's Children's Hospital with her newborn child Jan. 4, said Sujittra Nimmarnnit, the hospital's director. The baby was severely underweight and had breathing problems. She was put in intensive care.

When the mother returned to the hospital earlier this month she was given another baby whose wrist tag was missing, the hospital director said. Hospital staff realized their mistake two days later, but were unable to contact her.

The mother failed to appear for a scheduled checkup Tuesday, and Friday, she telephoned the hospital and asked a nurse to come and meet her. She told the nurse she had killed the baby, Sujittra

There was no immediate word on whether the mother faced arrest. She was being questioned by authorities.

Committee offers hunger solutions

SCOTT FOWLER

Collegian Reporter

Located in the middle of the world's breadbasket, Manhattan has 5,170 families eligible for food assistance.

The Hunger Project Committee of Manhattan helps those families by providing educational awareness of chronic, persistent hunger in Riley

A member of the committee, Mark Hager, graduate student in speech, said chronic, persistent hunger is a lack of food or inadequate diet that is the main problem in Manhattan, not famine.

"The committee encourages direct participation of campus and the community in combating hunger in the Manhattan area," he said.

Atina Hanna, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket, said the committee helps the Breadbasket by providing education and volunteering to collect and distribute food.

They are very effective in raising hunger awareness," she said. "Most people are clueless about the problems that exist.

"We need to raise people's consciousness in their own backyards. Many people send money to help the hungry in Ethiopia, but don't realize about problems across the tracks."

Edith Stunkel, adviser to the committee, said 23 percent of the children in Manhattan public schools received assistance with school-lunch programs in 1990. She said she is concerned about what those children eat when school was not in session.

"Families have to make choices, and sometimes it's whether mom puts gas in the car or the children only get noodles for dinner," Stunkel

The committee developed out of a food drive conducted by the Manhattan Association of Christian and Jewish Congregation, which was instrumental in getting the Flint Hills Breadbasket and shelter organized, Hager said.

He said April 5-14, the committee will put on a Hunger Awareness Campaign to educate people about hunger problems in Riley County, Kansas and the United States.

Also, a food drive will take place during the week. Baskets will be placed in churches, residence halls and other buildings, Hager said. Proceeds will go to the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

A person can become involved in the Hunger Project by understanding the hunger problem and donating time and efforts to provide education and food, he said.

Stunkel said individuals involved in the committee are self-motivated, and there are no regular meetings. Hager said, however, if interest and participation increased, regular meetings could soon be scheduled. The educational activities make the committee unique from other organizations providing assistance to the hungry, he said.

"Manhattan residents benefit from the education by better understanding the problem and actually getting the assistance," he said.

A person needing assistance with food must go through the Red Cross before they can get food at the Breadbasket, Hager said.

Those interested in becoming involved in the committee can help in the distribution and collection of food baskets April 5-14, he said.

While firefighters battled the blaze of a grass fire Monday, residents in the northwest Manhattan area prepared their houses and yards for the approaching and threatening flames.

Twenty-four of the art faculty members have compiled their work at the K-State Union Art Gallery to create a show representative of both K-State and Kansas.

The faculty members clearly exhibit their talents, credibility and strong abilities to communicate what they see or feel in a display of unique perceptions of our world.

Many faculty members chose Kansas, or the prairie, as the focus of their art works.

Roger Lane Routson's abstract painting of a "Konza Snowfall" shows white in many colors and complements Judy Love's "Hazy Morning" with the same insightful Kansan outlook.

Diane Dollar uses the prairie in a different way in her piece, "Lady of the Prairie Salad." Electrified colors and the pasted-up look of an old postcard enhance the strangeness of the picture of a woman floating on salad over the prairie.

Other themes in the exhibit include everything from religion and people to collages and patterns. Gary Woodward uses a book, a stick, feathers, beads, grass and cloth in his sculpture, "Objects from the Left Hand Pocket."

Lynda Andrus uses Chinese paper and designs in a two-frame collage.

Rap, Republicans and the almighty dollar

ne of the more noticeable aftereffects of the Persian Gulf War has been the surge in popularity of the Republican party. So much of a surge in fact, polls are already predicting a GOP sweep in the 1992 elections that will encompass every office from the presidency to your town's local dog catcher. Although I fail to see what exactly a Republican dog catcher's platform would be based around, I'm pretty sure it would have something to do with neutering. You know, the same thing Republicans suggest for impoverished women.

In spite of this recent upswing in conservative values, Republicans still have a major liability. Despite unprecedented minority support in both the 1984 and 1988 elections, the GOP is still seen primarily the party "rich, white guys" belong to.

Could the Republicans win in 1992 without the minority vote? Unfortunately (or fortunately depending on your political views), the answer is yes. Basically, they're so popular right now that even Dan Quayle is being taken seriously.

But hey, even Republicans want everyone to like them. It's part of the human wants and needs hierarchy. Therefore, the last few weeks have seen an upswing in Republican efforts to coerce the minority vote. They just want to be loved. Is that so wrong?

So, how have they gone about doing this? I would like to think through a "kinder, gentler" hand to minorities. Maybe, for instance, you could see some of the Civil Rights Acts the last two administrations have dismantled reimplemented. Maybe they could enact and actually enforce some affirmative action laws. The list goes on and on.

I'm not a political specialist, though. Somewhere in the deep, dark recesses of the Republican National Headquarters, the "professionals" came up with an answer that was quick, easy and involved, basically no effort whatsoever.

"Let's bring a controversial black rap star to the White House," they said. "What better way to show that we're sympathetic to the plight of minorities?"

So they went out and found one. A good one. Eazy-E of the group NWA (Niggers with Attitude). A group so controversial they were investigated by the FBI. A group and rapper whose best known song is titled "F*ck tha Police."

Eazy-E joined 1,400 GOP bigwigs at the White House for lunch with the president March 21. By all accounts, the visit was an unqualified success. So much in fact, that National Republican Senatorial spokeswoman Wendy Burnley said, "This is clear and convincing evidence of the success of our new Rap-Outreach program. Democrats eat your heart out."

A lot of things about this visit scare me. Although I've never been an enormous fan of rap music, I've always enjoyed the antiparental, anti-authority and, above all else, anti-Republican message a lot of this particular musical form stressed.

Alas, with the success of this Rap-Outreach program and what appears to be a Republican stamp of approval, how long before rap loses its bite? Are we going to start seeing raps about tax shelters and John Deere riding lawnmowers? Instead of Ice-T and KRS-1, are we going to start seeing guys with names like IRA Biff and Supply-Side Steven?

Scary, eh? Try imagining George Bush leading the nation in a rousing version of "F*ck tha Police" at his next State of the Union Address.

But all jokes aside, the bottom line question that has to be asked is whether the Republican party is honest-to-god serious about this being the answer to the problems of minorities in the 1990s. After years of ill-treatment, indifference to minority problems and sometimes even racist statements from the supposed leaders of this country, the best answer they can come up with is to bring a borderline celebrity to the White House for a lunch? If so, where does this crap stop? Is the answer to the problem of black unemployment to have MC Hammer perform at the inauguration ball?

Wendy Burnley seems to think so. I have a feeling an awful lot of other people in charge also think so. In this age of quick fixes, shortterm answers and media hysteria, people pretty much believe what they see. The answer then, is to have Bush shake hands with controversial minority figures and plaster that image on CNN and front pages all across the country. No substance, but damn, it sure looks good.

But before you buy into the hype, let me share one more thing with you. Despite the Republican's desire to court the minority vote through the Rap-Outreach programs, they didn't let this desire interfere with their basic philosophy of "no free lunch." Eazy-E had to make a contribution to the Republican National Committee in order to secure his invitation. This of course means the "kinder, gentler nation" and "thousand points of light" Bush offers to the nation are actually there. You just need $1,200 to see it.

In the end, I'm probably going to get letters criticizing this column for its admittedly simplistic approach to the Republican party. I think I'll answer that with another question. What's more simplistic? Me pointing out the flaws in a system and trying to encourage better relationships among all peoples of the world? Or the Republicans trying to make a profit off of it?

1991 Legislature

State should not allow another education cut

Does the Kansas Legislature have a mysterious, hidden source of revenue — or can proponents of higher education ultimately expect continued funding cuts to ravage our campuses across the state?

Concerned citizens must ask themselves where the money to fund the recently restored cuts to the highway fund and higher education comes from.

The restored cuts amount to $46 million, and Gov. Joan Finney's tax proposals appear to be falling into a dark abyss, just like the initiative and referendum proposal.

Tuition increases, although inevitable, aren't the solution because the funds raised by tuition increases will go into the general fund and can be channeled into other state projects.

last-minute cuts — and they will inevitably target funding for higher education.

Ideally, the Kansas Legislature should develop a long-term program to fund higher education, similar to the highway fund. Legislators should commit themselves to funding higher education on a two or three year basis, so they can set aside money in the general fund to pay the costs.

However, legislators seem to have short memories and aren't wise enough to plan ahead. They have already started to pick at bits and pieces of the highway fund.

If higher education isn't adequately funded, we may once again face the bare-bones educational dilemma we saw just last year. The same dilemma that spawned K-State's now infamous reorganization plan.

We can't allow the state legislators to stomp on higher education ... again.

o matter where you fit in on campus god, or person from Greece who can't understand what the fuss is all about — no matter which, if any, label you choose to call your own, you've got to admit we've got it pretty good at K-State.

My basis for comparison here is the situation with greek houses, specifically fraternity houses, at the University of Texas at Austin, referred to from here on out, not particularly affectionately, as UT. Read on for a pretty good scoop.

UT offers us the kind of fraternities that have given the greek system a bad name. The majority of the student body, who chose not to participate in the greek system, is constantly at war with the 5 percent who belong to the 28 social fraternities on campus.

The fall 1990 semester was a period of major disgrace for that 5 percent. Starting when an underage drunken member of UT's Beta Theta Pi house fell from the roof to his death and continuing with incidents where members of UT's Sigma Alpha Epsilon house used live chickens as basketballs during a party after pulling their heads off, UT's male greeks seemed to be out of control.

UT's Pi Kappa Alphas were stopped by the police just before they hoisted one of their pledges, blindfolded and hog-tied, to the roof of their house with ropes. The UT Sigma Chis painted slogans encouraging sexual violence in their yard for a party and the UT Phi Gamma Deltas were accused of distributing a racist T-shirt. The idiocy reached its height when, according to court affadavits, a UT Sigma Nu pledge was beaten and abused by both actives and alumni of the chapter.

UT is a large state university, where students are mostly from in-state and are often following in family footsteps by attending UT. The same could be said of K-State.

Texas is a conservative state, with revenue coming in from oil, farming and ranching. Texas has a large, functioning "old boy" network, and most of the people in power, be it on a business, government or university level, are 50-year-old white males. All this could also be said of Kansas. Both states even managed to elect its first female governor recently.

So why them and not us? Because we're lucky. But in this case, we made our own luck.

At UT, the university administration "goes out of its way not to control greeks." The greek adviser, a position that has only existed for two years, has little power and is quoted as saying "nothing can be done to control ... fraternities." The only action the university can take is to refuse to allow a fraternity to rent school property, appear in the yearbook or play intramurals for a year, to which the fraternities reaction is, understandably, "so what?"

This is where the difference comes in. At K-State, most of the social greek organizations are willing participants in the Intrafraternity or Panhellenic Councils, which means they allow themselves to be governed by Greek Affairs and our greek adviser, Barb Robel.

Greek societies can be put on a probation that forbids them from having parties with any other organization, participating in homecoming or greek week, as well as from intramural sports. In other words, fraternities can be barred from doing most of things members of greek social fraternities consider fun, and most of the things that help them recruit future members.

We're lucky. Apart from isolated incidents, most of our greek organizations exist in harmony with themselves and the rest of the campus. The situation, already in good shape, has only improved since I came to K-State four years ago. Four years ago, underage drinking and hazing were tacitly permitted, and my sorority, as well as most of the other fraternities or sororities on campus, took full advantage of this. Since then, Greek Affairs has cracked down and almost every house has abided by the new rules. The number of incidents has been steadily decreasing.

So what? Well, this column is meant to be more than praise for our greek system and those who make it what it is. Lately, word on the greek grapevine is that Greek Affairs is going to come out with some even stricter policies regarding alcohol.

People have been complaining we're giving Greek Affairs too much control. They say it will soon reach a point where you'll be losing a lot of freedom when you pledge a greek house. They say the different houses should confront these issues on their own.

If you've ever heard of "groupthink" you know what the problem is with that. Whether you're greek or not, you know groups of people rarely get together in a social situation and proceed to make lots of responsible decisions. Sometimes there are exceptions, but those are usually in groups lead by one exceptional person. As someone who's participated in a lot of group elections, including sorority elections, I say leaders in college groups are rarely elected on the basis of responsibility.

es, one does lose some of one's freedom by joining a greek organization. It's a choice that has to be made. At K-State, we've chosen to accept some loss of freedom in order to avoid some more serious losses, like losses of life, of respect, and of the rights of all individuals, greeks, non-greeks, and greek pledges to retain their individuality and self-respect.

It's been more than worth it. We have to continue to make that choice.

thing we think the state should provide.

But remember, these things do not come for free. Some-do not come for free. Somebody, somewhere has to pay for them.

At the same time we demand social services, Kansans complain about high income taxes, high property taxes and high state sales taxes.

Kansans need to wake up and realize that to have these types of services, they will have to pay for them.

One of the purposes of local and state government is to provide services you would not be able to afford by yourself—like highways.

Everybody must be able to contribute their fair share. It is their responsibility.

If Kansans want more services, then Kansans should expect to pay more taxes. It is the only way it can be done.

If Kansans think they are going to see an expansion in social programs while expecting tax relief at the same time, then they are asleep and dreaming.

Wake up Kansans and be prepared to pay your fair share.

If the United States had relied on subsistence agriculture, Americans would have to live on sunflowers and strawberries, said Bikram Gill, professor of plant pathology.

Gill was the second recipient of the 1990 Conoco Distinguished Graduate Faculty Member Award Monday in Nichols Theatre.

Gill presented a Special Honor Lecture to about 50 K-State faculty and students on K-State's Wheat Genetics Resource Center, a home to wild wheats from the Middle East.

"All our vegetable crops have been imported from elsewhere," said Gill, director of the center.

He said the first wild wheat and cereal crops came from the Middle East. Wheat originates from the fertile grasslands of Israel, Lebanon, Turkey, Syria, Iraq and the Soviet Union. Landraces like red turkey wheat, on which American subsistence agriculture was based, was brought to Kansas by Mennonites in the 1870s.

Wheat is a grass that was domesticated about 1,000 years ago, Gill said. Its parents are goat grass (father) and emmer (mother).

Today, wheat is grown on more acres of land than any other crop, Gill said. It's a staple food for 35 percent of the world population and provides 20 percent of the calories consumed.

On an acre today, up to 50 percent of the wheat comes from improved wheat varieties, which involves the use of germ plasm.

Animal and plant germ plasm is animal cell, which controls the characteristics passed on to the organisms. It is the most important genetic resource of the earth, Gill said.

Gill said that through manipulations of the germ plasm in wheat, a specific desired quality of the wheat varieties can be obtained.

For instance, to improve resistance against diseases and the yield of today's wheat varieties, germ plasm of the old landraces, collected in the Old World, and rye chromosome segments are introduced into the wheat genome.

Germ plasm also serves to maintain biological diversity, Gill said. This is important, since experts estimate that 1.5 million out of 6 million species will disappear by the end of this decade, and the extinction rate biotechnology. "It works like a gene bank," he Gill said when he came to K-State in 1979, no one had ever heard of wild wheat.

Gill, together with anthropology professor Patricia O'Brien, is the 48th recipient of the annual award since it was established in 1955.

Teaberry wins despite 'laziness' OU downs Buffaloes

BILL LANG

Sports Reporter

It might just take a good swift kick in the butt to get her out of bed, but once she's awake and on the track, she's one of the better high jumpers in the country.

Connie Teaberry — who would probably describe herself as one of the laziest people she knows — has emerged as a major force in the high jump this year and almost totally by accident.

"When I first saw the other girls in high school doing the high jump, I said to myself, 'I can do that,'" she said of her beginnings.

And the rest, as they say, is history. She has gathered three All-America honors and has cleared the six-foot barrier three times in her career. She is inching ever closer to the K-State outdoor record of 6-2, set by Rita Graves in 1984. But if there is one thing holding her back, it may be

"I'd have to say that I lack a lot of motivation," Teaberry addmitted.
"I'm glad (K-State assistant track) Coach (Cliff) Rovelto pushes me so hard. Otherwise, I wouldn't be jumping that high at all.

This past summer, Coach Rovelto mailed us a workout that we should do," she added. "I didn't do it that much, and that probably had an effect on my performance during the indoor season. I was working, and I used that as an excuse for not working out. At this level of competition, if you don't keep in shape, it shows."

Another thing holding Teaberry back is an injury to the hip flexor muscle, which she sustained last fall. However, it didn't hinder her performance this past indoor season.

"It hasn't bothered me that much this spring so far," she said. "But I still have to get it stronger.

"I'm just working on building the muscle around the hip area. I have to do a lot of running and lifting weights to become routine. But I still get just to build it up."

During the past indoor season, she gathered six first-place medals, including the Big Eight Indoor meet title, in which the K-State women's team finished second. At nationals, she placed eighth.

Teaberry said since arriving, she has found the level of working out to be a lot tougher, much to her chagrin.

When I first got to the collegiate level, I didn't expect it to be this much work," she said. "I didn't realize there was so much to the high jump that you have to learn."

As for success, it was something

"In high school I was a good jumper," Teaberry said. "I just wanted to go somewhere that would give me a scholarship to pay for my education. I just came here to jump.

'At first, some of the success was my third year and things are starting tough this year."

nervous at meets. Getting nervous at meets is something everybody gets. Then after your first or second jump, you settle down and begin to concentrate on what you have to do."

However lazy or intense she may be, there is one thing Teaberry wil never be - cocky.

"I can't think of myself in a cocky sort-of-way," she said. "If I do, then I start to lose the edge on concentration. I figure that if these other girls are good enough to make the big meets, then I have to concentrate on doing my best to beat them."

As for her possible success in the Big Eight outdoor season, Teaberry sees the title within reach of anybody.

"Right now, the Big Eight title is up for grabs," she said. "A lot of the girls from the Big Eight made it to really eye-opening, but now I'm in nationals, so it's going to be pretty

NEW YORK — Jeff Webster scored 24 points as Oklahoma defeated Colorado for the 24th consecutive time and advanced to the final of the National Invitation Tournament with an 88-78 victory Monday night.

The Sooners trailed by 14 points with 13 minutes remaining, but rallied to continue a streak that started on Feb. 13, 1982. In the previous meeting between the Big Eight rivals, Colorado blew an 18-point lead to lose 69-68 at Boulder on Feb. 27.

Colorado (18-14), making its first postseason appearance since 1969, was led by center Shaun Vandiver with 31 points and Stevie Wise with Kermit Holmes added 17 points for Oklahoma (20-14), but the Sooners' other three starters combined for 11 points. Starting center Bryan Sallier, averaging 21 points in his previous four games, did not score. Reserves Terry Evans and Roland Ware took up the slack with 16 and 15 points, respectively. Colorado matched its largest lead of the game, 62-48, with 13:06 left before Oklahoma responded with a 12-2 run capped by three consecutive baskets from Ware, closing the gap to 64-60 with 9:29 remaining.

After a Colorado free throw, a rebound basket by Holmes, a turnaround jumper by Holmes and a 3-pointer by Evans put Oklahoma in front 71-67 with 4:52 remaining.

Williams, KU doing what few thought possible

By the Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. - Long before he went to Kansas, and not too long after he was hired as an assistant at North Carolina, Roy Williams became well acquainted with hard

It started with his head coaching job at Owen High School at Swannanoa in western North Carolina, and continued to the summer of 1978. That's when — after Williams had attended one of Coach Dean Smith's basketball camps — a third assistant's job opened up at North Carolina. Williams had a chance to return to his alma mater, where he played junior varsity ball.

"I told him my initial reaction was yes," Williams said in a conference call interview. "I remember going down to the North Carolina high school all-star basketball game and talking with Bill Guthridge about it. That's the way it worked out."

North Carolina was one of the last schools in the country to add a third assistant. But the new role was a little of the same old song when Williams took the job.

"Really what that part-time meant was full-time job, part-time pay, to be honest about it," he said.

The job also didn't allow for a lot of input from Williams, which was fine with him. "For the first couple of years, I kept my mouth shut and listened and watched. I tried not to embarrass myself with lack of knowledge," Williams said. "The whole time, I was being taught every day about how to run a program. I was being taught every day about recruiting. It was a process where I tried to let it come about naturally.'

But it was slow in coming - real slow. For his first five years, work consisted of coaching the Tar Heel junior varsity as well as helping with the varsity program. But he had to moonlight to make ends meet.

"When I first started at Carolina, the wages as part-time assistant my first year was $2,700," Williams said. "So I had to find some other things to do if I wanted to eat."

In the spring of 1986, Williams was promoted to the role of recruiter in place of Eddie Fogler, who left at that time to become head coach at Wichita State.

North Carolina's three seniors, Rick Fox, King Rice and Pete Chilcutt, were all recruited by Williams. He also had a hand in bringing sophomore George Lynch to Chapel

Kansas coach Roy Williams (left) wasn't high on the list of candidates for the job he now fills, but KU athletic director Bob Frederick is happy with the man he selected.

also sent a letter to Eric Montross, who left his home state of Indiana to play for Smith. Soon, the tables would be turned. Instead of looking for players, Williams would become the object of a search. It was Smith who recommended Williams to Kansas athletic director Bob Frederick. The Jayhawks were looking to replace Larry Brown, another ex-North Carolina assistant who resigned after winning the national championship in 1988.

'When Larry resigned and announced he was going to San Antonio the next day, Bob had called Coach Smith, doing the wise thing to see if Coach Smith would be interested. At Hill, as well as junior Hubert Davis. Williams the time, Coach Smith said no but that he wanted to talk to Bob about me," Williams

Smith told Williams of the recommendation and said he might have a chance at succeeding Brown.

"My first thought was, 'You've got to be kidding me, Coach.' I really wasn't too concerned about it because I knew that, initially, there would be a lot more interest in a lot of mys other than Roy Williams," he said. "I didn't get fired up about it.'

But, as Williams joked, 92 other guys turned down the job and he was next in line.

It's Jayhawk, not Phoenix, that's emerging from ashes

By the Associated Press

LAWRENCE - That's not a Phoenix rising from the ashes of probation and tragedy and setting sail for Indianapolis, but a different kind of bird.

The blue-feathered, yellow-beaked creature is known around these parts as a Kansas Jayhawk. And around these parts is where everyone thought it would stay. At least for a

But with a date against North Carolina Saturday in the NCAA semifinals, the Jayhawks have vaulted back into the national spotlight, their recovery from a series of potentially devastating setbacks about three years ahead of schedule.

"I never doubted it would happen, but I honestly did not think it could happen so soon," said athletic director Bob Frederick. "It wasn't until we beat Missouri at home this year that I thought we had a real chance to become a special team this season."

After two-time All-American Danny Manning helped engineer an upset over Oklahoma in the 1988 championship game, all signs pointed to a steep decline in the basketball program Kansans hold so dear.

Larry Brown, the coach who took them to the 1988 title, held true to his wandering ways and departed for the San Antonio Spurs after first accepting and then rejecting the UCLA job.

Brown successor Roy Williams hardly had time to learn his way around Allen Fieldhouse before the NCAA unloaded a threeyear probation for a violation regarding a Brown recruit who never even played for Kansas

The penalties included tough recruiting restrictions and pinned on the Jayhawks the humiliation of being the first NCAA champs barred from defending their title. Still, Williams landed two top recruits when he signed Cortez Barnes and Chris Lindley, prospects on every major program's wish list. But Barnes failed to qualify academically. And Jan. 6, 1990, Lindley and some friends were horsing around in a railroad yard. There was an accident. Lindley's foot had to be amputated.

Jayhawk fans had to wonder what they did to anger the fates. Frederick wondered how much time he and Williams would have before Kansans, who view basketball as seriously as they regard the price of wheat, grew restless.

"I remember telling somebody I hoped people would be patient with Roy for the next few years," said Frederick. "I was concerned that the recruiting restrictions and all the other problems would take a real toll on our program. I didn't think there was much chance to keep right on going with the success we had been having."

But the period of decline proved remarkably short. Non-existent, in fact.

Nobody even thought to rank Kansas in the preseason poll in 1989. But the Jayhawks roared through the early part of the season, beating highly ranked LSU and UNLV to capture the preseason NIT. They were ranked either No. 1 or No. 2 most of the rest of the season and finished 30-5, losing to UCLA in the second round of the NCAA tournament.

This year's edition, Williams' third Kansas team, tied Oklahoma State for the Big Eight title and got a No. 3 seed in the Southeast Regional. During the early recruiting period, his first without NCAA-imposed restrictions, Williams corraled what many experts consider one of the top freshman classes in the nation.

The drought is over practically before it began. Things haven't looked so positive for the Jayhawks since Brown brought in Manning in 1984, laying the foundation for Final Four appearances in 1986 and '88.

"At our lowest point, I felt bad for Roy when the probation turned out to be as difficult as it was. It was more difficult than he or I ever imagined it would be, and I had tried to be as honest with him as I could," Frederick said. "After he had been here about a month, I was convinced there would eventually be good times here again. But I didn't know what it would take to convince others.

"Now they're convinced."

LERN studies trends in community education and divides them demographically.

"I don't think most people are aware of how linked Manhattan is with the rest of the world," he said.

'Manhattan is a micropolitan community. It has all the resources of a metropolitan community without all the traffic jams and other things associated with a metropolitan area."

Draves said what makes it possible for Manhattan to be in touch with the rest of the world is the idea of a global culture.

"What that means is information is flowing back and forth so quickly, that it's possible to serve people long distances in different situations because the means of information is so much more available now," he said.

Things that work in Connecticut also work in Wyoming. Stress management is just as popular in Wyoming as it is in Connecticut," he said. 'That's true internationally as well."

and international aid to the executive director at LERN.

Stuart has been working at LERN for about a year and a half and started as an aid for the seminar department. She now monitors most of the interaction that takes place among international contacts.

Adult education and leisure learning are a growing phenomena in the international arena, Stuart said.

"I just ran a listing of international members, and right now I have 612, she said. "I also have to input this whole book full of educational centers. There are a lot of these. Last week I put in about 1,100 names of educational centers in Great Britain, so it's not just in the United States.'

Gorbachev's Cabinet bans demonstrations for 3 weeks

By the Associated Press

MOSCOW - On Monday, President Mikhail Gorbachev's Cabinet banned rallies in Moscow for the next three weeks.

The Cabinet feared that unhappiness over price hikes and a noconfidence vote on Gorbachev's chief rival could boil into violence.

Boris Yeltsin's position as chairman of the Russian Federation parliament is to be tested at an extraordinary session of that parliament due to start Thursday.

Several groups, led by the anti-Communist movement Democratic Russia, have scheduled a mass demonstration to support Yeltsin Thursday. Moscow City Council, controlled by pro-democracy forces, has already granted a permit.

A similar rally March 10 drew about 500,000 people to Moscow and tens of thousands more into streets in other cities, the biggest demonstrations since the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution.

An emergency Cabinet meeting approved a resolution banning all marches, demonstrations, picketing and rallies, the state news agency Tass said.

The Cabinet instructed Moscow city and district officials, Interior Ministry and KGB security police to take all necessary measures to ensure strict compliance with the resolution.

Professor specializes in sexual awareness

PAULA BERGLUND Collegian Reporter

Everyone is interested in sex. In fact, Dr. William Griffitt, professor of psychology, said he constructed a psychology of sexual behavior class for this very reason.

Griffitt started the class in 1971. "Concern, based on my own history, for peoples lack of knowledge about sex gave me the idea for the class," Griffitt said.

Similar classes on human sexuality are offered in the College of Human Ecology, but Griffitt approaches the subject from a psychological and behavioral approach, he said. 'People don't feel comfortable with the topic of sex," he said.

He said attitudes do change however, and the political climate affects sexual attitudes.

Originally, the class was offered once a year. Popularity has grown and the class is now offered two semesters a year.

Griffitt said during the 15 years the course has been offered, no objections have been made by parents or

Senate postpones vote Allocations meeting moved to Thursday

ANDREW CAPPS Collegian Reporter

Student Senate had a special allocations meeting Tuesday night - but had to adjourn early because about 20 senators did not attend.

According to the Senate Constitution, a two-thirds majority is required when voting on special allocation increases for organizations on campus. There are 60 members of Senate and only 42 senators were present at the beginning of the meeting.

Senate could have voted on the proposals, but decided not to because it would require 39 votes to pass a line-item fee increase and that would only leave a three-vote margin of dissent.

The allocations to be heard were the increase and consolidation of the Recreational Services fees and an increase and addition to the Student Publications Inc. fee.

A motion was passed to move the allocation hearings to Thursday at the regular Senate meeting.

The senators had an open forum for a question-and-answer period. Amendments to the bills were discussed, and questions for the organizations involved were asked.

The increase and consolidation of the Recreational Services fee proposes that the fee be increased to $8 for full-time students, $3.50 for parttime students and 70 cents for summer students.

Derek Nelson, business senator, is amending the bill to raise the proposal to $9 for full-time students. $4.50 for part-time students and 75 cents for summer students.

Ray Robel, director of Recreational Services, said the Recreational Services is asking for the increase because of the increases in minimum wage and replacement and maintenance costs.

Senators questioned the Recreational Services' intended use of the increased line item.

"We came to the Senate for general operating expenses only," Robel

"Right now, we are open from 6 a.m. to midnight, and if the increase is not passed we will take additional cuts," Robel said. "We are trying to keep from making those cuts.

"If the proposal is approved," he said, "we will add equipment and replace worn-out equipment, but we are limited due to space."

Student Publications is proposing an increase in the operational fee to $6 for full-time students and $3 for part-time students.

Student hospitalized with rare meningitis

Serious form of illness treated in early stages

MIKE MARTIN

Collegian Reporter A K-State student was hospitalized early March 21 after being diagnosed as having a potentially fatal form of meningitis.

The student was diagnosed during the early stage of the illness and sent to Irwin Army Hospital in Fort Riley, said Robert Ecklund, a staff physician at Lafene Student Health

"She is doing very well and is expected to fully recover," Ecklund said. "But two points need to be made - the disease is around and if students become ill with anything that looks like a common cold, they should see their physician early.

The student is a freshman who lives on the third floor of Ford Hall.

Ecklund said this case does not mean there is an outbreak of meningitis on campus or in Manhattan, but he said students and Manhattan-area citizens need to be on the lookout for the symptoms of headaches, fever, neck or back stiffness, nausea and vomiting.

The disease attacks young college-age people and is transferable from contact with other people by oral secretions such as kissing or sharing the same pop can.

Radicals ignore Soviet rally ban

By the Associated Press

MOSCOW — Kremlin authorities put up concrete barriers Tuesday at both ends of Red Square to enforce Mikhail Gorbachev's three-week ban on rallies. but radicals scoffed at the ban and planned even bigger demonstrations.

The anti-Communist coalition Democratic Russia denounced the Soviet president's decree Tuesday that gives the Interior Ministry direct control over the capital's police force and increases his power to enforce the ban.

The move also was bitterly opposed by the Moscow city government, which is led by democratic reformists.

"All this testifies to the de facto introduction of a state of emergency and the intention to further stifle and destroy the beginnings of democracy in the Soviet Union," said Yuri Afanasyev, a leading reformer and member of Democratic Russia.

A decision Monday by Gorbachev's Cabinet to ban all demonstrations and marches until April 15 triggered fears of a major confrontation on the city's streets.

Prime Minister Valentin Pavlov has ordered the military, the KGB and other agencies to enforce the order. Pavlov said the ban was intended to prevent violence during the session of the Russian Federation parliament that starts Thursday. Hard-liners in parliament intend to expose its leader, Boris Yeltsin, Gorbachev's top foe, to a no-confidence vote. Democratic Russia said it expected at least 500,000 people to attend a rally scheduled for Thursday

Yeltsin's demands for greater autonomy for the Russian republic have become a rallying point for similarly minded leaders in other republics.

Moscow Police Chief Pyotr Bogdanov said extra officers would be put on duty and more barricades erected, but he and Bakatin said no tanks, armored personnel carriers or tear gas would be used.

"Despite anything the Pavlov-Gorbachev team might do ... the rally and demonstration will take place," organizer Lev Shemayev told a news conference.

The K-State debate team, ranked number one in the nation, sent seven teams to nationals today after a rigorous weekend of practice debates and research.

Susan Stanfield, instructor of speech and adviser to the team, said the two-member teams will debate the resolution of the Supreme Court granting excessive power to law enforcement agencies. She said the teams will debate sub-sets from that broad category. Smaller areas may include deadly force practices, sodomy laws, drug laws and domestic violence, she said.

The team spent last weekend practicing among themselves and each team had six practice debates, Stanfield said.

The teams compiled research at Washburn University and the University of Kansas law libraries. For less legalistic information, the teams gathered information from Farrell Library, she said.

David Filippi, senior in speech, said he has practiced the entire year toward winning the national championship.

Iraqis fight for liberation

Opposition leaders plan for overthrow of Saddam Hussein

By the Associated Press

ZAKHO, Iraq - A top Kurdish leader made a triumphant return to rebel-held Iraqi territory Tuesday and vowed to fight until all Iraq is liberated.

More than 10,000 cheering Kurds greeted the arrival of Jalal Talabani, who immediately met with other opposition leaders to discuss an interim government to topple President Saddam Hussein.

"This is the first time ever that the whole of Iraqi Kurdistan has been liberated," said Talabani, who has spent 30 years fighting for autonomy in the northern Kurdish region.

Western reporters visiting this city along the Turkish border and Erbil, 90 miles to the southeast, found both firmly in the hands of rebels whose fight began after Saddam's defeat in the Persian Gulf War for Kuwait.

This was in contrast to the south, where refugees fleeing on Monday said troops loyal to Saddam had recaptured every southern city once held by Shiite Muslim guerrillas allied with Kurds to the north.

But Talabani aides said they were beating back government forces in a battle midway between Zakho and the northern metropolis of Mosul, 60 miles south.

In other gulf-related developments on Tuesday:

At the United Nations, the leading Security Council members reached agreement on a new resolution that would clear the way for a permanent cease-fire in the war, Western diplomats said. A draft of the proposal says Iraq would have to destroy its chemical and biological arms under U.N. supervision, and Saddam's government would be banned from importing nuclear weapons material and conventional weapons.

Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, commander of the U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf, made a surprise visit to Oman to meet with the deputy premier in charge of security and defense. The official media did not provide any details on the talks.

Navajo Indian does sand painting in Union courtyard

Dennis Hopper, Topeka, demonstrates Navajo sand painting in the K-State Union Courtyard Tuesday morning as part of Native American Heritage Month. Hopper, a Navajo Indian, learned sand painting from his father.

LISA NOLL and

BETH PALMER Collegian Reporters

An awestruck crowd focused all of its attention on a young Native American man as an image created from sand formed before their eyes.

Dennis Rogers, Navajo Indian, demonstrated sand painting as part of Native American Heritage Month activities Tuesday in the K-State Union Courtyard.

Rogers set to work with just a table and five butter dishes containing bright-colored sand particles. He started his design with a white pile of sand and smoothed it into a circle. He then made small indentations around the edges to represent the sun.

"I never come to an organization like this and know what I am going to draw," Rogers said. "By the time I'm through, this picture will tell a story." Two important factors influencing his drawing are what time of year it is and what the weather is like, he said. Spring signifies a time to plant, fall a time to harvest and summer a time for rain. These areas are often prayed for through the paintings, he said.

Sand paintings are part of a healing ceremony which dates back hundreds of years, Rogers said. The ceremony is still used on reservations for sick people and those who need spiritual guidance.

As Rogers crouched over the painting that was beginning to take shape, he described the healing ceremonies. Before a painting can be started, the tribe sings and performs a ceremony.

When a painting is done, the tribe brings the sick person in and lays them on the painting. This destroys the painting, but the sand gets on the person and it is believed the illness is transferred out of the body and into the sand, he said.

Rogers said the traditional healing ceremony is much different from what he does for the public.

"I am fortunate to help illustrate our traditional custom and then give it back to Earth," Rogers said. "We have to give it back in a good way." Rogers surprised his audience by explaining how he destroys his painting once he's done. In our religions, our customs, our dance, we use a lot of eagle feathers, he said. "I will use the eagle feathers

Dole sculpture arrives at Capitol

WASHINGTON (AP) - A new Bob Dole arrived at the Capitol Tuesday. This one was made of bronze.

What arrived was a 150-pound bust of the Kansas senator. An Armenian artist presented the sculpture in appreciation of Dole's work on behalf of Armenia and victims of an earthquake there in

"In Armenia, we know that Sen. Dole has very warm feelings toward the Armenian people," said Friedrich Sogoyan, the sculptor who lives in Moscow

Armenia is one of the 15 republics of the Soviet Union. In 1989, Dole and his wife, Elizabeth, delivered relief supplies to Armenia and helped raise money for earthquake victims.

Sogoyan, who spoke through a translator, said he wanted the sculpture to show the courage of this great man who in this difficult historical time still has not forgotten the problems of the Armenian people.

Bill barring branch banking passed

TOPEKA (AP) - The Senate, which strongly supported a bill permitting interstate banking, tentatively approved Tuesday a measure that would prohibit interstate branching.

A provision that forbids out-of-state banks from opening branch banks in Kansas was tucked into a bill that would make other minor amendments to the state's banking code. Senators are expected to take final action today.

Woman locked in trunk for 3 days

OVERLAND PARK (AP) - A woman who said she was locked in the trunk of her car for three days was freed when shoppers in a grocery store parking lot heard her calls for help, police said.

The 41-year-old Kansas City, Kan., woman was treated Monday at a hospital for mild dehydration and released. She was not identified.

Police said the woman reported she was accosted Friday evening by two men in the parking lot. One man was armed and said he planned to take her and the car, then forced her into the trunk. She said they drove around for a time, and the car was returned to the parking lot late Friday night or early Saturday. The car was parked 100 to 200 feet from the store's front door, but passersby apparently did not hear her cries for help until Monday night, Detective Terry Allen said.

Kansas City elects first black mayor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - A Methodist minister won a close non-partisan race Tuesday to become the first black mayor in a city with a population two-thirds white.

Emanuel Cleaver defeated fellow city councilman Bob Lewellen 53 percent to 47 percent. The vote was 50,204 votes to 43,989 votes. Cleaver succeeds three-term Mayor Richard Berkley.

"This is not a Cleaver victory," he told supporters. "This is a Kansas City victory. The election is over and Kansas City is beginning a new era.'

Monfort Inc. announced Tuesday it GREELEY, Colo. (AP) was reopening its five plants in Colorado, Texas, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa, because beef market conditions had improved. The plants owned by Monfort, a subsidiary of ConAgra Inc., were closed temporarily Monday. The shutdowns affected about 8,500 employees at plants in Garden City, Dumas, Texas, Des Moines, Iowa, Grand Island, Neb., and Greeley, Colo.

Company spokesman Gene Meakins said Tuesday the 2,300 workers at the Greeley plant returned to their jobs today. He said all of the employees on temporary furlough in Garden City, Dumas and Des Moines would return to work Wednesday. About half of the employees in Grand Island were scheduled to return to work at that time, said Meakins, adding that he did not know when the rest of the workers would be summoned back.

Meakins said conditions in beef markets have become more favorable for meatpackers, whose profits had been squeezed by record-high cattle prices and relatively low supplies of marketready slaughter cattle.

Farrell Library will cut off opening hours during the Easter weekend. The library will be open from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday and from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m. Easter Sunday.

The assumption is that the demand drops dramatically by noon Friday and that it does not resume until late Sunday," said Brice Hobrock, dean of the libraries.

"I know that we are inconvenient for some people," he said. "We'll offend some people who believe that a Christian holiday shouldn't affect University life," he said.

Hobrock said, for instance, the library doesn't close on Jewish

Low demand and bad resources were the reasons to reduce Easter opening hours in Farrell, he said.

Plans made to improve Manhattan economically

City's Blank Page task force, K-State work together to take advantage of local research

CHRISSY VENDEL Collegian Reporter

City commissioners examined specific steps to improve Manhattan's economy at a Tuesday afternoon work session.

Presentations were given on providing incentives to successfully recruit industries to Manhattan, beginning implementation of a plan to develop the private business sector, supporting city arts organizations in the future and the benefits of a proposed sister city in Czechoslovakia.

The commission wanted to know whether to develop specific incentives to attract new industries or decide on a case-by-case basis.

"A blend is best," said Dale Stinson, Manhattan Chamber of Commerce director for economic development. "Potential businesses appreciate something in writing.

"Just set policies comparable to competition - because there is a good opportunity to be creative at the local level," he said.

Stinson said the most important incentives for recruiting today are training resources.

"This is something that can be better utilized in this community than others," he said.

See related story/Page 8

Commissioner Gene Klingler said Manhattan is not losing industries to other cities in Kansas, but to cities in states like Nebraska, North Carolina and Pennsylvania.

"We're No. 1 in Kansas, but No. 2 or 3 when it's time to make the decision," he said.

Klingler said Manhattan needs to work toward achieving better incentives in Kansas because the city can compete with other cities but not other states' incentives.

Bringing in industries is also part of the Vision 20 plan to develop private business discussed at the work

Vision 20 is a 20-year plan for increased economic development for Manhattan based on the continued presence of K-State and Fort Riley, but intended to diversify the local economy - thus building a strong private business sector.

The plan was written into a report by the Blank Page Economic Development Task Force. The task force and was formed in fall 1989 under the direction of the city and Riley County commissions.

The report was distributed last September to K-State, Fort Riley, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and other interested organizations in the area.

"People have been pleased with the report. They've read it, say they understand it and ask what to do now," said Rick Mann, chairman of the task force.

Mann said one concern that needs ■ See CITY, Page 12

A research park on or near K-State may some day provide economic development to Manhattan and employment opportunities to K-State students and graduates.

Bill Varney, Manhattan, said the idea was originated by the Blank Page Development Task Force last year. The task force of 50 Manhattan citizens was divided into five different committees, appointed by the Manhattan City Commission and the Riley County Board of Commissioners. Their goal was to develop a plan for the long-range economic development of the local economy.

The Needs and Strategies Committee, chaired by Varney, con-cluded that a research park would enhance economic development by taking advantage of the local resources of K-State and a highly educated population, he said.

President Jon Wefald then instructed members of the University he said. "K-State loses many gradu-

K-State's research capabilities in areas of the University's expertise. In the future, this research would be applied to local commercial and industrial activity.

"The research park is actually a mission of the Kaw Valley Develop-mental Authority," Varney said. "The purpose of this is to allow private investors to combine with researchers and sell their expertise."

John Walters, president of the KSU Research Foundation, said corporations could cut the cost of research by moving their research activities close to similiar research being done at K-State.

Research park tenants would be companies interested in gaining employees from the University and the community, Walters said.
"As far as K-State's well-being is concerned, a research park would rovide great employment opportunities for students after graduation," staff to research the idea, Varney ates to jobs outside the Manhattan area. This will keep some of them here instead."

Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, said if a research park is developed, it would enhance development in K-State; Riley, Pottawatomie and Geary counties; and

"A research park would be another attractive feature for K-State and and the surrounding community," he

It would also increase the number of graduate students on campus, Walters said.

'K-State has the same number of undergraduate students as MIT." he said. "But in turn, they have 10 times the number of graduate students as K-State does, allowing them more research money.

"This research park will be a good benefit to all, provided we find quality tenants who are research-oriented and ecologically aware. This will increase Manhattan's quality of life greatly, as well as the community, the University and the state," Walters

K-Stater's 'Pursuit' at Purple Masque

JENNIFER HOFFMAN

Collegian Reporter

The original production of "The Pursuit of Anne," written by a K-State graduate student, will debut tonight in the Purple Masque

Michael Solomonson, graduate student in theater, wrote the play as his master project for graduate

"I started writing this play about one year ago in Advanced Playwriting," Solomonson said. "I feel very positive, even though I had to give it up for the director and actors to interpret. On opening night, the production will be a discovery for me as well as the audience."

Eleven members of the K-State Players have been practicing to perfect their original interpretations of the characters they play.

"It is terribly exciting performing this, because it is the first time and we are the original cast," said Tim Oumiller, sophomore in theater English. "We have nothing to go on since we are the first people to ever do the play. It's our own interpretations."

The play is a take-off of the life of actress Anissa Jones, who played in the TV series "Family Affairs."

'Since I grew up with the program and knew of her death, the idea just always stuck in the back of my head," Solomonson said. "Anissa Jones' death was just an inspirational spark, and the rest just rolled from my imagination."

There are two plots in the play. The first plot is about Anne, starting when she is 18-years-old and is having a hard time finding a job. She eventually dies of a drug overdose.

The second plot is based on the doctor who does the autopsy of Anne. He tries to find out if the overdose was a suicide or if it was an accident. As he studies Anne's life, he learns about his own life and realizes that he and his wife have left out the more important things in life.

"Even though this is based on a real actress and event, the play isn't the actual facts," said Nancy Zenger-Beneda, director and graduate student in theater.

The play is entered in the American College Theatre Festival, Zenger-Beneda said. It's competing in the categories of playwriting and production.

"If it is thought to be good enough, then it will be entered in the five state regional competition," she said. "If it wins there, then the production will be performed in Washington, D.C., at the Kennedy Center.

The play will be running at 8 p.m. through March 30. Tickets are available at McCain box office.

Sidewalks impose structure, curb freedom

ometimes on my early morning or late evening walks, when the campus is neither completely awake nor out for the night, I feel compelled to explore. This is my second year at K-State, and although I feel familiar with the space of the campus as it is laid out - in ordered concrete walks and grass plots - I know also that there are places I haven't been.

Some of these are probably places I'm not supposed to go. There is always talk in the residence halls of the "steam tunnels" that run underneath the campus like an ominous labyrinthine underworld. And I'll bet few people on campus have been down every corridor of Seaton Hall, with its awesome and unending network of staircases and studios.

Seaton is also interesting because each time one enters the building, he might find an exit on the way out that was unknown to that person in the past. As an English major, my experience in Seaton has been limited. Nevertheless, I can see doors on the outside that I would have no inkling of how to get to from the inside. There seems to be an almost limitless number of doors leading into and out of Seaton, and each one, if taken, will put a person at a different place than any of the

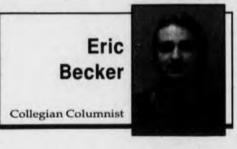

The sidewalks on campus are pretty nice.

They're in good repair. They're well-lit at night. But when I walk in the early morning or the late evening, my path seems predetermined by them. I walk in the places where the sidewalks lay, not because they take me to any particular place where I want to go, but because I feel it is where I'm supposed to

There is no rule I'm aware of against walking on the grass, but when I do, it is only a shortcut between sidewalks. I step off of the pavement to avoid the few steps to a sidewalk intersection that would force me to slow down and make a 90-degree turn. I cut the corner. Others do the same. Soon there is yet one more path worn into the grass, from walk to walk, like a narrow acceleration lane coming onto an interstate highway.

The sidewalks certainly serve their purposes. They reduce uneven ground to gentle inclines and direct us easily between the places we go to study, work, eat and live on campus. And there is a certain beauty, a certain comforting order and convenience to the campus as well, in part because of this infrastructure we, as students or faculty at K-State, take for granted.

Still, when one visits campus simply to enjoy the feeling of spring in the air, or to wander without direction, or to explore, these sidewalks seem to impose a destination. In their roundabout way, they all lead somewhere. One must dodge these buildings with their front doors when walking on sidewalks. Like corridors in houses, sidewalks are designed for people who know where they are going, and who mean to arrive at their destinations without much meandering or distraction.

When I follow the sidewalks on campus, I see the same sights every day. I see the same buildings and the same trees from the same angles and positions from which I saw them the day before. There is little room for variety in this order. There is little opportunity to see the same things in different ways.

It's the reason I like Seaton, with its numerous entries and exits. When I come ited through before, there is the rush of a new perspective, a unique and unfamiliar vantage. I see the campus differently; I notice the slope of a roof or the texture of a tree in a way I have never experienced it before.

We need this variety — this change in the experience of our everyday lives. Maybe it is especially essential now as we near the end of the year, as we drag ourselves around in the familiar routines that are too natural and too automatic to any longer serve as their own stimulations.

Spring has come, and has brought along its own fever and beauty. But with spring comes conflict as well — an urge to spend our time outdoors instead of inside perusing a book.

Spring has changed this perspective slightly. Spring has brought a life to campus one could not have seen at the beginning of the semester. I want to lie in the grass and touch the trees, to move freely among the natural world and exist in it independently of all

But when I go outside, I find myself immediately on the sidewalks, hurried, on my way to a place I feel intent upon reaching, without wanting to go. I end up in Aggieville or in the K-State Union, knowing all along where I would find myself when I finally stopped back to campus through a door I've never ex- walking, wondering which turn in the sidewalk might have taken me someplace else, and wishing I had found it, wherever it might have gone.

The routine of a directed life has its charm. its security and its predictable end. But there are times one might like to escape it. There are times one might like to forget all of his or her predetermined notions of acceptable behavior, self-worth and success.

But it is difficult to escape this routine, linked as it is with the standards we have internalized, with the standards we expect to take us — by yellow brick road — to the "good life" we dream about, read about in books, and hear about from others.

he trick is to walk in the grass beside the sidewalks, even when the sidewalks are taking us where we want to go. Give this infrastructure a rest and find another place from which to "see" the campus around you. Change your chosen course when it seems like something you need to do. And find those places you've never been. Look for a new world in the old.

And let me know when you find it. For although I'm sure it's just off of the pavement in front of my feet, I'm still searching for it, myself, as well.

Students should be atop college's advising agenda

In its admissions guide, K-State boasts more than 200 programs spread throughout the University's seven undergraduate colleges.

"You're not alone," the publication states. "K-State has special advisers to guide you to organizing the advising departcourses that interest you and to careers that suit your talents."

Well, apparently these advisers are located in schools outside the College of Arts and Once students gain admission to K-State's College of Arts and Sciences, they get lost in the huge number of students enrolled in that college. Their access to those "special advisers" is limited to short telephone calls, long waiting lists and a single graduate check.

The problem is not that the advisers in the College of Arts and Sciences are necessarily good or bad, it's that access to these advisers is not easily attained.

The large number of students who have to be served and the diverse curriculum requirements of students in that particular college are not good excuses to neglect the students' needs.

The diversity of degrees listed under the heading of Arts and Sciences has always been a factor and should have been considered when ment of the college.

If that requires more advisers - fine. If that requires better advisers - fine. If that requires longer office hours fine. But whatever the requirements, they must be met by the University.

The College of Arts and Sciences should provide the service it advertises in its admissions paraphernalia: good advising. Part of good advising is making it accessible to each and every student.

When Kansas-resident students paid $785.60 fee per semester to attend K-State (Non-residents, $2347.60), they paid for more than a four year degree, they paid for the professional guidance necessary to gain the degree. It is K-State's responsibility to provide that guidance.

In regards to Karin Dell'Antonia's column March 25, all I can say is,"Ha, you guys ain't seen nothing yet, when it comes to administrative control in the greek system."

I am saddened when I hear about the incidents happening at the University of Texas, and it makes me appreciate the higher-ups who watch over greek affairs here at K-State. But please don't feed me lines about loss of freedom in greek organizations. Greeks here have more freedoms than they actually know.

I am thinking about my greek friends at William Jewell College in Liberty, Mo., when I say this. The sororities there are not allowed to have houses because of the saged command of an alumnus. The alumnus said he would not donate a large sum of money to the college if sorority houses existed there. As a result, sororities there can only have a chapter room at the union, a union closely monitored by the administration.

The fratemities are even more "under the thumb." Just this past year, the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity chapter has been put on social probation because of (gasp!) pumpkin raids, taking a sorority's composite and the printing of obscene party favors saying "Quaking the Lake." I may be wrong, but haven't I seen worse party T-shirts on our campus?

I don't know, you tell me. I would say freedom is subjective in this issue of greek affairs. K-State greeks, don't abuse your freedom.

freshman in philosophy Team deserves more

Editor,

We are writing in behalf of the K-State/ Fort Riley Rugby Club. Earlier this semester. there was an article in the Collegian informing the students about the efforts and skills of the rugby club. Also included in the article was the fact that the K-State/Fort Riley Rugby Club would probably end the season ranked third in the country, with only Army and Navy teams ahead of them.

In Monday's issue of the Collegian, there was a small article about the rugby team, one we feel did not do the team justice. The rugby club is just like any other sports team at K-State, and members deserve equal recognition for their achievements. The athletes in this club, and other clubs such as lacrosse, soccer and women's rugby, work very hard to represent K-State, while at the same time there are students who don't even realize they

So in the future, we would like to see more supportive articles in our student newspaper for the efforts of these hard-working athletes.

Voices speak out

My name is Alicia Poteat, and I am president of Voices for Choice, the pro-choice "faction" that I assume Matthew Vajnar was referring to in his letter to the editor March 8. Voices for Choice has never and will never remove any materials posted at this university, unless the event has passed and we need to post fliers. I am amazed at Vajnar's accusations, as they are totally unsubstantiated. Many of our own group's fliers have disappeared, but we have too much integrity to publicly accuse someone without proof.

If Vajnar and his ilk believe that women do not die from illegal abortions, we would suggest that they go to Indiana and speak to Becky Bell's parents. In 1988, Bell found herself pregnant at age 17, then discovered that Indiana had a parental notification law. Bell couldn't bear to tell her parents, so she had an illegal abortion. She died.

Or Spring Adams, the 13-year-old Idaho girl, who was faced with the same kind of parental notification law as Bell. She was forced to "notify" her parents of her decision to have an abortion. Her father, who had impregnated her, when "notified," shot and killed her with a shotgun. Kansas is currently considering similar parental notification laws. If you care about reproductive freedom, we urge you to contact your state representatives. If you believe this issue doesn't concern you because you are not a teenager, you're wrong. The anti-choice faction is chipping away at choice, one group at a time. First, poor women were denied freedom of choice with the denial of medicaid funding. Now they're restricting access for teenagers. Get involved now, before your right of choice is gone as well.

Oh, and Vajnar, we expect an apology.

The Collegian's whole-hearted support of the Supreme Court's decision to invalidate existing fetal protection policies of individual companies reveals a further progession of disturbing judicial precedents and raw

In citing the "choice" argument, the Collegian disregards the fact that there are very real consequences to the child upon birth. Does choice supercede the risk of possible birth defects for the child? Also, wouldn't the "logical" extension of the choice argument provide amnesty to the mother who uses illegal substances, like crack, during pregnancy? Can even vehement pro-choice advocates, like the Collegian, accept this?

Undoubtedly, there are problems with protection policies of individual companies that bar all fertile women from hazardous jobs. But the reactionary attempt to invalidate all policies is worse.

Regardless, the mothers (for better or worse) have the final say. Girls, I absolutely plead with you to realize what an awesome responsibility pregnancy is. If you would simply defy this propaganda of the proabortion/women's empowerment movement, then the Supreme Court and the Collegian can be reduced to bothersome, but harmless, institutions in regards to abortion. ## Dean candidates to visit K-State

College of Arts, Sciences to have new leader by April 9

CHRISTINE SPLICHAL

Collegian Reporter Four candidates for the position of dean of the College of Arts and Sciences will visit K-State during the next several weeks.

The four candidates include Loren Crabtree, Kenneth Klabunde, John Haeger and Peter Nicholls. All of the candidates' visits will be completed by April 9.

Duane Nellis, professor of geography and head of the search committee, said he hopes a decision about a new dean will be made within a few

"The committee will discuss the candidates with the provost, and then the provost will make the final decision," Nellis said. "There will also be a chance for input from the faculty and staff to the search committee."

Crabtree is currently a professor of history and associate dean of arts, humanities and social sciences at Colorado State University. He has a bachelor's in history, a master's in Asian studies and a Ph.D. in history, all from the University of Minnesota.

Klabunde, a K-State professor of chemistry, was named "University weeks after the visits are completed. Distinguished Professor of Chemistry" in 1988. He served as head of the chemistry department from 1979 to 1988. Klabunde is also the president of Faculty Senate. He has a bachelor's from Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill., and a Ph.D. from the University of Iowa - both of which are in chemistry.

> Haeger is the assistant vice president for research and dean of graduate studies at Central Michigan University. He was the founding editor of the Michigan Historical Review. He was also the acting, then perma nent head of the department of his-tory at Central Michigan from 1981 to 1985. He has three degrees from Loyola College in Chicago - all in

The final candidate, Nicholls, is the associate dean of liberal arts and sciences at Northern Illinois University. He joined the faculty at Northern Illinois in 1971 as an assistant professor of mathematical sciences. His degrees, both in mathematics, are a bachelor's from London University and a doctorate from Cambridge University. A native of Kent, England, he became a naturalized U.S. citizen in 1984.

K-State can now boast of having a Big Eight women's golfer of the month.

Sophomore Valerie Hahn earned the honor after finishing second by posting rounds of 79 and 78 at the Northern Illinois Snowbird Tournament played in Tampa, Fla., March 14 and 15.

"It's a great honor for the program as well as for Valerie," assistant coach Mark Elliott said. "We are very happy that she has been recognized by the Big Eight."

Hahn just missed first place by one stroke after the completion of the two rounds.

Hahn said she missed a short put that would have given her the top spot in the field of 35 golfers. "My nerves really affected me when I was putting at the last hole," The Las Vegas native's performance led the team to a third-place finish in the tournament, its second of the spring. In the first tournament, the pressure is on.

18-team North/South Tournament in Jacksonville, Fla., Hahn took fourth individually by averaging a 79 for three rounds.

Elliott also praised Hahn's improved game.

"Being just a sophomore, she has played some great golf for us," he said. "Val has become the most consistant golfer on our team and

Tennis team ready to face arch-rival Jayhawks today

TODD FERTIG

The tennis team may just dodge a bullet by the name of Eveline Hamers when they take on the University of Kansas at L.P. Washburn Recreational Area tennis courts today.

Ranked 13th in the nation with a 24-6 overall record, Hamers is a returning All-American and the anchor of a deep KU squad. Hamers, however, suffered a broken bone in her leg in early March and has since been out of action. Her status for today's match was not known, but a KU sports information representative speculated that Hamers would not be ready to return.

Since the loss of the All-American, who carried dual meet records of 11-0 in singles and 8-3 in doubles, both compiled in the No. 1 position, the team has taken a nosedive against nationally ranked competition.

A rugged schedule during spring break saw KU lose four successive duals to No. 16 Brigham Young, No. 13 Tennessee, No. 24 Utah, and No. 9 Arizona State. In the four-meet stretch prior to their win over Grand Canyon to close the trip, the Jayhawks managed to win just two

"It's a considerable factor if Eveline Hamers will play or not," K-State coach Steve Bietau said of today's meet. "They're a very deep and solid team without her, but obviously with her, they're just very tough. Depth is their strong point and they have several good players who will be competitive in higher positions."

The loss of Hamers, however, would shift the rest of the squad into higher positions in the lineup. Rene Raychaudhuri, ranked 59th in the country, compiled an 8-1 mark at No. 2 singles but is just 2-3 filling Hamers' No. 1 spot.

Bietau pointed out that KU received votes in the most recent national poll. The team defeated No. 16 Indiana in January and played to an 8-3 record before hitting its skid at spring break.

In their dual meet in the fall, the Wildcats fell to KU 7-2. Angie Gover claimed the team's only singles victory, beating Stacy Stotts in No. 5 singles 6-2, 6-0. Suzanne Sim and Neili Wilcox slipped by KU's No. 2 doubles team of Chris Bowers and Page Goins 6-4, 2-6, 6-4.

Hamers beat Michele Riniker 7-5, 6-2 and teamed with Raychaudhuri to defeat Riniker and Gover 6-4, 2-6, 6-3 in doubles.

Riniker downed Raychaudhuri in the finals of the Wildcat tournament 6-2, 1-6, 6-2 just a week before the dual with KU.

Bietau said the team is pretty familiar with the Jayhawk squad after seeing them twice in the fall, but if KU is forced to shift their lineup to fill Hamers' spot, the matchups at several positions will change.

Riniker, 16-18 on the season, will play No. 1 against KU. Sim, Wilcox, Thresa Burcham, Gover and Tracy Parker complete the order Riniker and Burcham will team at No. 1 doubles, Sim and Wilcox at No. 2 and Gover and Parker at No. 3.

"Thresa and Michele have looked very good every time out, and with Angie at No. 3 that team is always going to be dangerous," Bietau said.

If spring fever is hitting you as it has been known to affect many a K-State student at this time of the year, University officials sympathize with you. In fact, they've devised a plan to help you cope with your reluctance to attend class. The plan involves throwing on shorts and grabbing your shades and heading out to Frank Myers Field for this afternoon's baseball game between K-State and the Northwest Missouri State Bearcats.

Although the starting pitchers are yet to be determined, the first pitch is area. due at 2 p.m.

The games appear to be a remedy for the team, as well. They are coming off of a four-game, Big Eight opening series split with arch-rival Kansas and are anticipating a road trip this weekend to face Oklahoma. The Wildcat record currently stands

The NCAA Division II Bearcats from Maryville, Mo., bring a threegame winning streak and an 8-6 record into the game. Arkansas looms as the only common opponent between the teams. The Bearcats dropped a 7-5 decision to the perennial powers from the Southwest Conference.

K-State opened the season against the Razorbacks, winning one of the three tightly contested matchups. Northwest has also dropped a pair of games to Big Eight contender Nebraska, 2-0 and 13-3.

The Bearcats, coached by 15-year veteran Jim Johnson, bring two .400 hitters to Manhattan in Jodi Jeffries and Dave Svela. Svela leads Northwest in practically every statistical

Last season, the Bearcats compiled a record of 24-13. This year looms as promising, considering they return 16 lettermen after winning the Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association last season.

The Wildcats own a 3-1 record this season against MIAA opponents.

Brett hopes for solid start, finish in '91

By the Associated Press

HAINES CITY, Fla. - Thinking positive last May was just about the only thing George Brett could do. He sure couldn't hit.

Anybody in his circumstances would have had a difficult time finding something good to think about as the outs mounted. Maybe, just maybe, thoughts began to creep in that it was over.

Brett, entering his 18th season with Kansas City, is looking at the downside of his 30s. This season brings his 38th birthday.

He stunk at the plate early last year, sinking to .200 May 7. That's right, George Brett was struggling to keep his average above .200.

The whispers soon began. Whispers could have been a roar, because Brett heard every word.

Washed up. Thirty-seven is too old to be playing baseball. Hang it

"Sure, I heard all the talk," a perspiring Brett said in the Kansas City clubhouse after finishing off an exhibition game with a long workout in the weight room.

"When you keep hearing the talk all the time, day after day, you start to believe it. Look at what Mike Schmidt of the Phillies did a couple of years ago. One day he calls a press conference and says: 'That's it. It's over. I'm embarrassing myself out there.' And he was gone.

"I'm smart enough to know I'm not going to play forever. I don't know a lot of things, but I think I am smart enough to know you don't play this game forever. I just hope I know it before the Royals have to tell me."

Maybe a lot of people last year should have been smart enough to - or at least been smart enough to remember - that when Brett gets hot, no one can stay with

That's exactly what happened. Brett, still hitting only .267 at the All-Star break, batted .388 the rest of the way to catch, and then hold off, Rickey Henderson for his third hitting title. He became the first player ever to win hitting titles in each of three

"I just tried to think positive," Brett said. "I always try to accentuate the positive and block out the negative. It was great to go back home at the end of the season and have everybody tell me they thought I was going to be back a lot sooner and be playing golf full time."

Brett stands 293 hits short of 3,000, a milestone many once thought he must reach in order to enter the Hall of Fame. Brett's other numbers are a little short because of the numerous injuries that have kept him out of too many games.

His 281 home runs and 1,398 runsbatted-in aren't particularly impressive on their own, although he puts them with a .311 career average.

There are the oddities of Brett's career - the Pine Tar game or the hemorrhoids in 1980 - that have helped set him apart.

"I feel great," said Brett, looking trim and compact at 205 pounds. "I'll be 38-years-old in two months, and I feel great. I don't know how a normal 38-year-old body is supposed to feel because I've had all the injuries, all the surgeries, but I feel great. My legs feel great. My bat feels quick.

"I never think about (the Hall) unless I'm asked. But I'm no different than anybody in this room. I'm no different than any of those guys over on Fields 2, 3, 4 and 5.

New football league now open for business

Lang

Sports Reporter Ah, springtime. The trees are blooming along with the flowers. People are still sporting their spring break tans. Baseballs are flying through the air at Frank Myers Field, and footballs are flying around the Wait a minute ... let's back up for just a second. We've got trees and flowers blooming, baseballs and people with tans - whether they be fake or real, you decide - running around campus.

But footballs?

Well, it seems as if the National Football League is trying to set up a farm system of sorts. The World League of American Football got underway this past weekend, just in case you didn't notice.

So in case you're suffering from the post-football season doldrums, and your life isn't quite complete without a pigskin pepperoni pizza, then this is just for you.

But, haven't others attempted to fill the baseball season with footballs before? You bet they have, and they failed miserably. First there was the World Football League. This league above all the others probably had the most legitimate shot at surviving. But the NFL started paying higher salaries to the players, effectively shutting down the upstart league.

Then along came the United States Football League. This, too, was an almost successful attempt at filling the spring air with pigskins. It almost made good, lasting two solid years and sputtering through a third before yielding to bankruptcy and folding.

Then there was arena football. This pinball version of the game fell short of all general description and fan interest. But there were a few players who crossed over to make a buck or two from the NFL. But, once again, it was lack of money and fan interest that doomed this league.

Now we have the WLAF - kind of sounds like a comedy-oriented radio station, doesn't it - that looks to make the American version of football the most popular sport in the world. Good luck trying to supplant soccer in Germany.

However, you've got to love the names of the teams for this league:

Begin with the London Monarchs. I'm sure a butterfly looks intimidating on the side of those helmets. The Frankfurt Galaxy, Barcelona Dragons, New York/New Jersey Knights (maybe the Giants and Jets of the NFL could work on their state allegiance) and the Birmingham Fire. There are also the Montreal Machine — the picture of a mousetrap with pistons just doesn't instill fear in me — the Sacramento Surge — how would one design a surge? — the San Antonio Riders, the Orlando Thunder and the Raleigh/Durham Skyhawks.

Now, the let's take another look at this league. The NFL has invested millions of dollars into this globetrotting extravaganza, and so have the ABC and USA TV networks. This is something that the other leagues didn't have the luxury of. Also, WLAF, has several former NFL braintrusts heading the league in a good direction. NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue asked these men to set up a committee to see if the American version of football could be played abroad. And, sure enough, there tuned out to be enough interest in it to give it a thumbs-up from the NFL and pour in millions to help it get started.

Now the NFL has stuck its neck out and made it an easy target for the NFL Players Association. No doubt the salaries of many players will have to be curtailed due to the payments of coaches, players and all sorts of what-not in the WLAF.

Well, if this league succeeds, then maybe we'll see a lowering of salaries in the NFL. Personally, I just don't see how Bruce Smith of the Buffalo Bills rates getting a cool million for knocking someone on their butt, when we have teachers just getting by as they teach kids not to fall on their butt and lose out on life.

Maybe this is some big plan Tagliabue has devised to solve this problem of escalating salaries.

Right now, this isn't the greatest example of football played, but for someone who's a true sports nut, this will have to do for now. I'm sure the knob on my TV set will break sometime. And maybe, just maybe, we'll see the next great player come from Madagascar or Beijing, while he makes only $40,000 a year.

Indian sovereignty, taxation in Kansas to be addressed

MELISSA SMITH

Collegian Reporter

As part of Native American Heritage Month, Steve Cadue, tribal chairman of the Kickapoo Indian Nation, will talk about "Indian Sovereignty and Taxation Issues in Kansas," at noon today in the K-State Union 212.

Cheryl May, director of K-State News Services, said the taxation issue deals with service stations on the Kickapoo reservation selling gasoline cheaper than other stations, because they are not subjected to state gasoline taxes.

Indian nations such as the Kickapoo are quasi-sovereign, said Harald Prins, assistant professor in anthropology and American ethnic

That is, according to federal law, they have the right to control their own internal affairs, he said.

The United States, on the other hand, has full sovereignty. No other nation exercises control over it, and it is not dependent on anyone else,

The main difference between full sovereignty and quasi-sovereignty is the right to declare war.

With respect to the Kickapoo nation, it was recognized as a sovereign nation until it signed a treaty with the United States, Prins said. It gave up its right to declare war and about 90 percent of the tribal land, but agreed the federal government would not infringe upon the remaining 10 percent.

He said he believes Kansas does not have the right to tax gasoline on the reservation, but the Kickapoo government should impose the taxes itself to promote economic development. This would help the Kickapoos raise money and get off of welfare while still maintaining the nation's limited sovereignty.

"The state is not served by an impoverished nation in the middle of the state," he said.

Native American warrior art 'diary' documents way of life

Cindy Briggs Collegian Reporter

Not too many professors can boast of a cowboy father who lived among Arapahoe Indians and starred in several Hollywood westerns. But Ronald McCoy can.

McCoy, professor of history at Emporia State University, pre-sented a slide show of Native American warrior art Tuesday night in the K-State Union in conjunction with Native American Month.

Warrior art is a form of communication Native Americans used during the mid-1800s, he said. McCoy compared the drawings to a diary because they document the Native American way of life. It was common for Native American artists to draw fellow tribesmen in battle scenes, the capture of an enemy or other good deeds, he said.

The style of warrior art is considered by McCoy to be abstract because of its lack of background or foreground.

The art was usually accumulated into books, many of which were found by soldiers who kept them as souvenirs. McCoy said the books have for the most part just recently surfaced, but because dealers have stripped them to sell the drawings individually, many have been lost or destroyed.

The abstract style of warrior art is the sophistication 20th-century modern artists have been striving for and studying, McCoy said.

Achitecture students study in Italy

STACY HILBURN Collegian Reporter

A small hilltown in Italy has provided 26 K-State students and two faculty members with a new, although temporary, setting for their education.

American architecture students were invited to study in the city of Castiglion Fiorentino — about one hour south of Florence, and two hours north of Rome.

Under the direction of two people, an old convent was renovated and became the Santa Chira Study Center.

One of the directors was Paolo Barucchieri, adjunct faculty to K-

One of the two K-State professors in Italy, Neal Rassman, said there is a weekly schedule, but the course content is different.

Ben Stindt, senior in architecture. said there are still frustrations in the classes and studios, but the atmosphere is relaxing.

"Everything's organized, but things can get changed around,' Stindt said.

Robbie Chisholm, senior in architecture, said she wished more professors were like the ones she has in Stindt said their education has become more diversified. He said they're reading more, writing poetry, playing music and studying philosophy.

Chisholm said she enjoys the atmosphere and is not homesick.

'Maybe if I didn't have the family of the students, I would be," she said. "We have all worked together at school, but we have become much closer since we came here.'

The students and the professors live in one building and eat all three meals together, but Rassman said there have been very few conflicts or problems.

'We have a fortunate group chemistry," he said.

Stindt said the language difference hasn't been much of a problem

Chisholm said studying in Italy is an enjoyable challenge, and the students have learned to talk more with their hands and arms.

One-of-a-kind products are another cultural factor that has caught the students' attention. Chisholm said many things, like linen and lace, are hand-crafted items.

"Most of the products in the United States are mass-produced, and when you see something unique, it's hard to pass up," she said. She also said this temptation might

She said the program costs about $5,000, which does not include tuition or spending money. It does, however, include airfare, room and board, meals and field trips.

they return to the States. Stindt described the majority of the meals as "great pasta" and said everyone looks forward to the meals.

Chisholm said the program was a one-shot experience that she would not repeat.

"You can't repeat an experience like this," Chisholm said, "especially the group chemistry and teamwork. Next year, the students will have their own special experience."

House Taxation Committee endorses bills

By the Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House Taxation Committee endorsed a package of bills that could raise almost $250 million to pay for a decrease in property taxes.

The committee endorsed a bill to increase the state sales tax and impose it on more items. The measure would compensate for those tax increases by decreasing property taxes on motor vehicles, homes and small businesses.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee Monday recommended a budget for the Kansas Board of Regents that includes tuition increases at all regents schools. The recommendation does not mean the Legislature is instructing the regents to raise tuition, but the board can spend more than is now in their budget, if they raise tuition to pay for it.

The Senate Judiciary Committee endorsed a bill requiring the National Collegiate Athletic Association to observe all due process rights afforded by the federal and state constitutions in enforcing its rules and regulations on Kansas schools. The committee's action sent the measure to the Senate for floor debate.

Candidates debate future of Manhattan

City, K-State diversity discussed

BETSY HIDALGO

Collegian Reporter

Candidates for city commission debated the economic future of Manhattan at a forum sponsored by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce Tuesday night at Manhattan High School.

After each of the candidates briefly introduced themselves, questions were asked by three panelists. The first question asked each candidate's opinion on Manhattan's biggest shortcoming.

"Manhattan needs diversity by bringing Fort Riley and K-State into the community because they do not feel a part," candidate Linda Ferguson said.

Candidate Craig Raborn, junior in geology, said the most important part of his campaign is who he is, a student at K-State and a lifetime resident of Manhattan,

"We need a pro-active role when it comes to what areas need attention, instead of waiting until they are so run down," he said. Raborn's said his main concerns are outside, off-campus lighting for safety and unsafe housing for tenants.

The negative effect of Manhattan Town Center on downtown businesses was also discussed.

"We need to deal with this situation as a whole so as not to be a deterent to Aggieville and Westloop," candidate Edith Stunkel said. "The business areas do not need competitiveness; they need cooperation."

Many other cities use first-floor business space and second-floor residential space in their downtown areas, candidate Jim Dubois said. This may be the case in the future 'planning of Manhattan's downtown area.

Raborn suggested another possible solution.

"The answer might be to condemn the buildings that are not being used, so the city can build a central business district," he said. "This would mean more people would be downtown for longer hours.'

The Manhattan law board was also debated.

Candidates were asked how to make it more accountable for the $3 million a year it receives from the city, but only has meetings for one hour a month.

"If we make them more accountable for their funds that they spend, maybe they will become more efficient," candidate Roger Maughmer, the only incumbent,

The audience wrote down questions for the candidates to answer on cards provided. One question from the audience was how to find tangible ways to include Manhattan, Junction City and Wamego as a regional unit of economic and social growth.

"We can support each other with tourist activity and support," candidate Helen Cooper said. "Also, a public transportation system could be developed between Wamego and Manhattan because many people come from Wamego to work in Manhattan.'

K-State plans festivities for celebration of Easter

MELANIE SCHOENBECK Collegian Reporter

Willie the Wildcat's ears will be a little larger this week.

Easter is Sunday and many activities - ranging from special church services to bunny costume rentals - are taking place on campus in celebration of the holiday.

The Union Program Council is offering pictures with Willie the Wildcat in disguise as the Easter bunny. Willie will be in the K-State Union alcove, second floor, Wednesday and Thursday. He will be available for photos from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. both days. The cost is $1.50 per picture.

"It is Willie the Wildcat, and he

K-Staters who want their own chance to wear the ears can rent bunny costumes in the UPC Office throughout the week, Pope said.

However, the bunny suits are not as popular as the Santa suits were in December - possibly because Easter is not as commercialized as Christmas, she said.

A free egg-dyeing class was offered March 24 through UPC. The creative class was B.Y.O.E., or bring your own egg.

"I heard it went well. The kids had a ball," Pope said.

The Thetas and Sig Eps are planning to have 30 children as guests for a barbecue and games in the park, and give Easter baskets, said Leah Weaver, sophomore in elementary education.

Religious activities are commonplace on campus during the week of Easter. Various campus religious organizations and ministries will offer more services and activities relating to Easter.

The four were charged in the March 3 attack on a black motorist that stirred national outrage and charges of racism after it was captured on videotape by an onlooker and played on television. King is black; the officers are white.

At a hearing Tuesday, attorneys failed to persuade a judge to grant the four officers preliminary hearings.

Jazz album creates beauty

'Drastic Measures' showcases talent with 'Hopeful' theme

Reviewer says...

Many of the sounds are new synthesized versions of old instruments. Ironically, this artificiality is used to create the inspirational reflections of real living and breathing. The music is very up, with a light, jazzy flavor.

The melody lines seem less expressive than they are reflective or sympathetic. The beauty of the music is in its gentleness.

torney John Barnett, representing Proposition 115 speedy trial initia-Officer Theodore Briseno, 38.

Also entering pleas were Sgt. Stacey Koon, 40, and Officers Laurence Powell, 28, and Timothy Wind, 30.

The videotape of the assault shows King being struck 56 times with nightsticks, kicked and shocked with a stun gun after his car was stopped after a high-speed chase.

Koon and the others are charged with assault with a deadly weapon

Sting's "Spirits in the Material World" opens the album and sets the tone. Four of Manring's originals build up to Hendrix's "Purple Haze." Like the Turtle Island String Quartet, or the Kronos quartet, which also do remakes of Hendrix songs, Manring's inclusion of "Purple Haze" on the album shows a jazz fascination with Hendrix.

The album ends with, "When Last We Spoke," a summary of the melancholy hope and romance that characterizes the sound of the album.

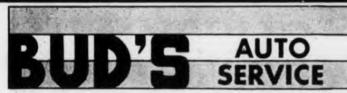

The slowness with which the songs are allowed to develop is positively poetic. Sounds that are barely there become strong and pulsing beats until they explode into nothing more than a reiteration of themselves. The sounds are complex, the songs simple, and the album is a grand example of the beauty sensible only in music.

On Monday, a police union lawyer said the FBI was unable to question at least 25 colleagues of the four policemen because the officers would not voluntarily cooperate.

WHAT A COLLEGE GRADUATE NEEDS MOST (BESIDES A JOB)

Other than gainful employment, we think a college graduate needs a car most.

That's where Ford Credit and Dick Edwards can help. We're offering the Ford/ Mercury College Graduate Purchase Program. Dick Edwards can arrange special financing through Ford Credit, and $500 cash back from Ford Motor Company.

Here are the qualifications: graduate with a Bachelor's or advanced degree between October 1, 1989 and December 31, 1991; have verifiable employment beginning within 120 days of vehicle purchase; have a salary sufficient to cover living expenses as well as a car payment. Although a prior credit history is not necessary, if you have one, it must be satisfactory to Ford Credit.

So take advantage of the Ford/Mercury College Graduate Purchase Program at Dick Edwards.

When it comes to helping college graduates, Ford Credit makes the grade.

House to debate 'toughest' ethics bill ever initiated

By the Associated Press

TOPEKA - The House is scheduled to debate Wednesday possibly the toughest ethics bill the Legislature has ever considered, with some members concerned that it could be too tough.

The bill contains 48 pages of proposed changes in lobbying, campaign finance and conflict of interest laws. It would give more money and more power to the state Public Disclosure Commission, which enforces ethics laws.

The measure would ban direct corporate and union contributions to candidates and prohibit candidates from raising more money from PACs than they do from individual donors. It also contains proposals to restrict lawmakers from making money off the state or by representing outside clients before state agencies.

"I think it's a strong bill," said Rep. Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, chairman of the House Elections Committee. "It's the strongest we've ever had."

More conservative legislators are expected to try to add amendments to make the bill less restrictive. They have argued that the legislation could go too far and discourage people from running for public office, something harmful to a citizen Legislature.

"Strong is an adjective that can be used to mean many things," said Rep. Tim Shallenburger, R- Baxter Springs, the committee's ranking minority member, who supports many of the bill's provisions.

The House originally was expected to debate the measure next week, but its leaders changed their minds.

Majority Leader Donna Whiteman, D-Hutchinson, said they wanted to give the Senate enough time to consider its proposals during this legislative session.

'We've got three weeks left," Whiteman said. "If it's going to be considered by the Senate, we need to get it out of the House this

One provision expected to start a heated debate would prohibit legislators from taking more than $1,000 to represent a client before a state agency, except in state

Another would prevent a legislator from being paid to work for a state agency, unless the work was obtained after competitive bids were taken.

The proposed ban on corporate and union contributions, as well as the limits on PAC contributions, are also expected to generate intense debate.

Also expected to generate controversy is a proposal to allow the Disclosure Commission to issue subpoenas on its own. Currently, it must go to a district judge to gain access to private records.

■ CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1 equipment fee be established. That fee would consist of a $3.90 fee for full-time students and a $1.95 fee for part-time students.

The proposal is largely because of a new interpretation of the state sales tax costing more than $24,000 in additional yearly expenses. K-State agencies were mandated to charge sales tax in all transactions with Student Publications.

Student Publications never received official notification of the change.

In a prepared statement, Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications, said, "The Senate Finance Committee has been very understanding of our situation. That committee must wrestle with tough financial issues, and, because of that, it recommended a smaller increase than what we originally proposed."

Joel Gruenke, graduate senator, made a recommendation to amend the Student Publications bill allowing Senate to vote on the two bills

"This will allow Senate to have the option to pass both, only one, or neither of the bills," Gruenke said. Johnson said the Collegian and the Royal Purple are consistently ranked as some of the best publications in the nation.

"We work in tight quarters. Our student editors work for low wages," he said. "We work with an ancient press that doesn't allow us to use additional color that graces other Bernd Forester, professor of architecture, gave the presentation and said having a sister city would be mutually beneficial with no major financial commitments.

"They need help on how to run their city - practical things - and they could assist Manhattan because they are culturally far ahead of us," Forester said.

Hayter said a sister-city agreement is a definite possibility, but the commission would seek additional information.

FarmHouse fraternity hid eggs for mentally handicapped children from Big Lakes Development Center to find Wednesday morning.

The children arrived early and assembled in the dining room where they were greeted with donuts and juice. Even though they enjoyed the refreshments, they were eager for the arrival of the day's special guest, the Easter bunny.

Soon the Easter bunny arrived and was greeted with warm hugs and kisses from the 50 children who

The children paired up with members of FarmHouse and then followed the bunny outside to begin the long-awaited hunt. The children bashfully began the hunt and marvelled in the fact they actually found that first egg.

For many of the children, the act of bending over to grab an Easter egg is a difficult task.

"It's so rewarding to watch these children perform tasks that to us would be routine," said Candie White, director of the children's center at Big Lakes. "Every day tasks are sometimes considered a milestone for these children."

"It is really cute to watch them," said Sandy McInteer, sophomore in business administration.

She said she has helped with Easter egg hunts for the developmentally disabled in the past, and once the children get over their shyness, they enjoy themselves.

"I think the guys from the house enjoy it as much as the children do," White said. "It is really fabulous that they take the time to sponsor the event.'

After the egg hunt, the children returned to the dining room where a brief story was read to them to relate the true meaning of the Easter

Peanut butter absent from K-State Union as price increases

Poor crop, upgrade in quality results in cut

DARLA GOODMAN Collegian Reporter

Products containing peanut butter, including cookies and sandwiches, have been eliminated from the K-State Union Stateroom menu.

The cut is because of a peanut butter price jump from 90 cents per pound last fall to $2.03 per pound March 20, said Barb Depew, production manager of Union Foodservice.

Purveyors warned Depew last fall of expected price increases due to an upgrade in the quality of the peanut used in peanut butter coupled with a poor crop year, she said. The Foodservice staff began evaluating its use of the product and deciding how it could be eliminated.

The Union had been using 30 pounds per week, mostly in peanut butter cookies and monster cookies, Depew said.

Student government was informed about the planned cutbacks, and customer input was sought for items that could be substituted for popular foods containing pea-

Chocolate chip-oatmeal cookies and M&M cookies are two new items available as substitutes, she said.

Terry Pfannenstiel, manager at Food 4 Less, said the store has seen the price of an 18-ounce jar of peanut butter rise about 50 cents in the last month. He said this has been due to the poor crop.

Store managers at Dillon's Food Store and Dutch Maid Supermarket said they have not noticed any price changes yet.

"I think it affected larger operations first because of quantity," Depew said. With grocery stores, it's just a slower

She said the price is not expected to come down soon.

Peanut butter is not the only product used in the Union that will be affected by price increases. Depew said purveyors have warned her that bananas will probably be next.

Currently, bananas cost between 39 and 49 cents per pound, but the price is expected to go up to $1 between now and

Senate to vote on 4 proposed student activity fee increases Agenda full after unsuccessful Tuesday meeting

ANDREW CAPPS Collegian Reporter

Student Senate will try again tonight to reach an agreement on four proposed fee A special allocations meeting March 26 was for voting on two of the proposals, but Senate decided not to take action at that time. The four proposed fee increases include Recreational Services, Student Publications Inc., K-State Union and the Student Government Association.

Senate Chairman Pete Marsh and Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt decided not to proceed with the meeting because there was not adequate representation from the

"We felt it was not fair for the groups coming to us for fee increases," Marsh said. "It was not to put the groups off, but to be fair."

Senate will meet with the groups tonight at the regular scheduled Senate meeting, Marsh said. Each fee increase proposal will be debated until an agreement has been reached. "People are scared to make the decisions," he said. "We need to be careful because it is the students' money we are dealing with." Marsh said the issues Senate is dealing with are setting precedents and should be handled with extreme care.

Recreational Services is asking to consolidate its recreational building program fee with its recreational services fee, in addition to an overall increase.

The increase and consolidation proposal requests the fee be raised to $8 for full-time students, $3.50 for part-time students and 75 cents for summer students. Rec Services is requesting the fee increase because of increases in minimum wage and higher equipment replacement and maintenance costs.

The Student Publications proposal requests an increase in the operational fee to $6 for full-time students and $3 for part-time The proposal also requests an equipment fee be established. That fee would consist of a $3.90 fee for full-time students and a $1.95 fee for part-time students. Student Publications is asking for the fee increase because of an increase in production costs and continual equipment failures. Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications, has shown extreme concern for the use of outdated research materials by Senate.

The research, prepared by Heitschmidt, quotes balance figures from one year ago. Research material is issued to senators to read and study prior to Senate to inform them about each of the issues.

"I think it is dangerous to rely upon outdated materials in a situation such as this," Johnson said. "I think it is good for everyone involved to learn more about Student Publications and some of the challenges we face."

An error in Wednesday's Senate story incorrectly reported the Student Publication fee proposal was based on a pending tax on expenses, which actually referred to last year's proposal. However, this year's proposal is only addressing equipment need and opera-

"There is absolutely no tax rational with the current fee proposal," Johnson said.

The Union's proposal asks for a $5 increase to cover operation cost and a $1.75 increase for repair and replacement.

Marsh said there has not been a lot of debate concerning the Union's proposal, but he said he is confident with the work done by the Student Finance Committee.

The SGA proposal would establish a $1.90 headcount line item. The headcount affects every student enrolled at K-State.

The line-item increase would provide an additional $66,931 to be allocated by Senate for SGA services and activities.

If all the proposed increases are passed, K-State students can expect to pay an additional $16.05 per full-time student and $7 per parttime student per semester.

Family surprised by circulated photo WAUKON, Iowa (AP) - Angela Regan thought there were just three copies of a picture taken before her parents' 1918 wedding, but it turns out there are 10,000.

Parts of the picture appear on each side of a double picture frame Hallmark sold nationwide.

Regan, from Waukon, Ia., was shopping with her daughter, Joan Anderson, of rural Lansing, Ia., at a Hallmark greeting card shop

of John and Ella Schulte, taken just before their wedding June 11, 1918, by a photographer in Spring Grove, Minn. Until that day, Jan. 7, the family thought only three of the photos existed. Regan's sister, Margaret Wiltgen of Waukon, wrote to Hallmark and learned a company designer found the wedding photo in an antique store in the Kansas town of Stanley in 1989.

The family theorizes a copy of the photo may have been sold as part of the Spring Grove photography studio's inventory when it went out of business.

Senate declares 'Jayhawk time'

TOPEKA (AP) - Jayhawk mania reached the Statehouse. Jayhawk, the University of Kansas' costumed mascot, and seven members of the school's spirit squad led cheers to recorded KU fight songs in appearances before both the Senate and House.

Sen. Wint Winter, R-Lawrence, a former KU football player, was chief sponsor of a resolution unanimously adopted by the Senate declaring the period March 20 through April 1 as "every Kansan a Jayhawk time."

To the feigned objections of senators with allegiances to other schools, most notably rival K-State, Winter said the resolution means "every Kansan must be a Jayhawk" while KU participates in the Final Four this weekend.

The resolution said KU's gaining the Final Four of the NCAA basketball tournament for the ninth time capped a magnificent basketball season and said the team's success was a tribute to teamwork, strong competitive spirit and determination to win.

Tornadoes wreak havoc in Kansas

WICHITA (AP) - Many tornadoes raked central and southern Kansas Tuesday night.

Although many injuries were reported in the wake of the storms, none were life-threatening.

County officials reported major damages in Reno, Marion, Kingman, Cowley, Sumner, Pratt and Allen counties.

High winds Wednesday reduced visibility in the Wichita area to one-fourth of a mile and prompted the Kansas Tumpike Authority to bar oversized trucks from the turnpike.

Widespread fence, sign and roof damage was reported in the Wichita area.

In Lawrence, insurance company spokesmen said cars and buildings were damaged by golf ball-size hail. By early Wednesday morning, Farmers Insurance Group had taken calls on 300 claims and Farm Bureau Insurance had reports on damage to 800 cars and 300 homes.

A truck driver caught in the tornado west of Hutchinson suffered a broken leg when he was sucked from his vehicle, which then overturned on him. John Snyder, 49, of Abbyville, was in satisfactory condition. He

Hiawatha policeman, chief resign

HIAWATHA (AP) - A Hiawatha policeman resigned Wednesday, one day after holding a news conference in an effort to clear his name in the investigation of a teen-age girl's death.

"In light of public rumors, I feel my effectiveness as a police officer has been damaged," Val Taylor, 28, said in his letter of resignation. "My resignation comes as an attempt to protect my family, myself and my profession."

Taylor said at his news conference Tuesday that he had been questioned by the Kansas Bureau of Investigation about the death of Melinda K. Long-Burton, 16.

Jim Turner, the Hiawatha police chief, also resigned Monday night. He said his resignation had nothing to do with the girl's death but that it was time for him to leave.

Snowstorm covers northwest Kansas

GOODLAND (AP) - A spring snowstorm closed roads and schools throughout northwest Kansas Wednesday morning but cleared out and made room for sunshine in the afternoon.

Blizzard conditions developed in the northwest part of the state before dawn, just hours after tornadoes and high winds tore through southern Kansas.

Between 2 and 4 inches of snow and strong wind with gusts up to 64 mph caused drifting of wet snow and near-zero visibility conditions, although temperatures were near 32 degrees, said Bob Boyle of the National Weather Service in Goodland.

Most roads west of U.S. highway 83 in the northwest were closed at one time or another Wednesday morning. But all had been reopened by about noon, including Interstate 70, officials said.

Portions of I-70 from Hays to the Colorado border were closed starting about 6:30 a.m. The last westbound section, near Brewster, was reopened about noon when several jackknifed trucks were

Many of the students in the core teaching skills class leaned forward in their chairs, straining to hear Preston Ivy's soft voice as he spoke about education from the perspec-

Four new executive officers of the Panhellenic Council for the 1991-92 school year were elected by senior Panhellenic representatives Monday night.

Panhellenic is the governing body of the 12 sororities on campus and is affiliated with Greek Affairs.

Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said she would like to see the new officers tackle three goals.

"The goals need to be continued," she said. "Finalizing the alcohol policy, continuing activities with the black greeks and setting up a judicial board that's separate from the officers are our main priorities. New Panhellenic president Mindy Lough-

EDITORIAL

Gospel accounts conflict, raise question

any hundreds of years ago in a region near the Mediterranean Sea, a remarkable event took place. The birth of a saviour occurred; one who would be the redeemer and founder of a new religion.

This was no ordinary birth. The event had been prophesied hundreds of years before in sacred writings. Seers wrote of a divine and brilliant light that would glow in the heavens above the Holy One's place of birth.

Critically important to this unusual birth was that the infant was conceived by God and born to a virgin.

Information concerning the redeemer's childhood is sparse and obscure. He is portrayed in sacred writings, however, as exceptionally intelligent and wise for his age.

With a full understanding of his divine directive, the saviour began a public ministry in his early 30s. This was not without a convincing demonstration of his supernatural powers. There were numerous reports that he cured the blind, cast out demons and performed many wondrous miracles in his travels as an itinerant preacher.

He preached a message familiar to all Christians today. He spoke of a single, allpowerful, all-knowing, all-good, all-loving, all-seeing, fatherly type God who punished those who practiced evil and promised a reward to those who were good.

He taught that there was another life after death that would begin at the end of the age in a worldwide bodily resurrection followed by a final day of judgment. On this great day, all who had followed God's instruction on Earth would go to heaven to be with him; those who had refused to follow God's teachings would go to hell to live with the devil in eternal pain and torment.

His greatest teaching was a saying many people today use as a lifelong rule: "Whatsoever you do not approve for yourself, do not approve for anyone else."

Was this divine saviour Jesus Christ, the mythical New Testament messiah? No. The aforementioned biography is of Zoroaster, founder of the Zoroastrian religion, which began in Persia — six centuries before the supposed birth of Christ.

Christianity owes a rather large debt to the Zoroastrian religion for its ideas concerning devils, demons, angels, saviours, resurrection, final judgment and paradise. Most Christians find this very surprising. Many deny it outright.

The Christian religion, however, is very similar to a number of religions, which flourished in the Mediterranean Basin during the few centuries prior to the alleged birth of

Among the 15 or so ancient gods who experienced death and resurrection (and promised likewise for their followers) were Adonis, Dionysus, Tammuz, Hyacinth, Hoama, Mithra and Osiris. Many of these religions even coexisted for a time with Christianity and were eventually supplanted by it.

The threads of commonality among these religions are all too apparent. They all promised immortality; they incorporated saviour gods who suffered, died and rose from the dead; the saviour gods were a sacrifice for the sins of the believers and procured forgiveness and salvation for them; they provided mem-bership by a unique ritual of rebirth or baptismal cleansing; and finally, they all utilized some form of sacramental meal, in which the eating of the sacred food was actually the consumption of the god himself.

Christianity and its clergy profess to promote honesty, yet rarely, if ever, is Christian dogma taught from a historical, comparative perspective to the average parishioner. There are some things the church prefers not to stress during standard religious indoctrination. Your average believer might get the wrong idea, you see.

This weekend, Christians celebrate Easter based upon assertions recorded in the Bible. Although it is extremely effective, one really doesn't need historical evidence to disprove the resurrection claim. The biblical record New Testament. provides enough contradictory evidence to sufficiently destroy its credibility.

Thomas Paine wrote about biblical truth in "The Age of Reason": "I lay it down as a position which cannot be controverted, first, that the agreement of all the parts of a story does not prove that story to be true, because the parts may agree and the whole may be false; secondly, that the disagreement of the parts of a story proves the whole cannot be true."

Paine was one of the first to point out that outrageous claims require outrageous proof, and that everything written in the Bible is simply hearsay (e.g. the gospels are all anonymous and we have no original

And so it is, that when one honestly weighs the veracity of the resurrection story of the New Testament, a preponderance of evidence tips the scales to the side indicating hoax and sham. Not only is there no eyewitness account of the resurrection or physical evidence of such an outlandish occurrence, but also none of the four accounts describing the most important event in the Christian religion agree as to exactly what happened on that mythical day.

I therefore propose a challenge to advocates of the Christian persuasion. I am not making a request for proof. No, it is much more straightforward: simply, tell me exactly what happened on the day of Christ's resurrection as recorded in the four gospels of the Begin at Easter morning and read to the end of each of the four gospels (Matthew 28, Mark 16, Luke 24, and John 20-21). You might also read Acts 1:3-12 and Paul's version of the story in 1 Corinthians 15:3-8.

Then, without omitting a single biblical detail from these separate accounts, write a chronology of the events (what happened first, second, etc., who said what, when and so on) that occurred between the resurrection and the ascension.

If you accept the challenge, you will most certainly find that the Bible — the only recorded account of what is claimed to be the most important event in all of human history contains four versions of the resurrection. which cannot agree on the simplest of details (eg. How many people discovered the empty tomb and who were they? Was the tomb open or closed when first discovered empty?). In fact, if you follow the conditions of the challenge, you will find it impossible to give a single, coherent account of what happened on the day that is so fundamental to Christianity.

Apathy sweeps nation, but who really cares?

There is a new weather front proposed reorganization that sweeping across this nation; one that seems to be affecting everyone. But no one cares.

As this stormfront moved into Topeka one week ago today, it canceled a rally on the Statehouse steps that was billed as a protest by 3,000 to 5,000 angry taxpayers. But no one cared.

Louis Klemp, a former Republican gubernatorial candidate and the protest organizer, captured the storm's essence in a few words when he said that you can't fight apathy. But who cares what he said?

Ironically, one reason for the rally was to support initiative and referendum, a bill that would give more governmental power to each individual Kansan. But apathy reared its ugly head, and citizens didn't even care enough to show up to further their own freedoms.

Apathy. But who cares? Don't say you do because most of you have shown you don't - that includes faculty, staff and students.

Well, you should. Universities are seen as places where thoughts, ideals and actions meet head on. The activism of the late 1960s is down, but not out. The decision by the Western creditor nations to relieve Poland of $17 billion in debts will do more than simply boost the Polish Poland, Eastern Europe's most indebted nation, owes other nations $33.5 billion and has been calling for debt relief for more than a year. The alleviation of debt will help Poland move from a centralized economy to a market economy. The change strengthens democracy in an Eastern Bloc country that has been dominated by Communism.

Last week, President Lech Walesa announced that U.S. citizens no longer would need visas to enter the country beginning April 15. Easing the restrictions should encourage U.S. tourism in Poland, thus boosting the economy. Although U.S. citizens may not flood Poland anytime in the near future, it is a valuable opportunity for the United States.

Allowing U.S. corporations to settle in Poland would benefit both sides economically. Additionally, the United States stands to gain a new position in the formerly Soviet-controlled region.

Kickapoo Indian speaks of racism

Gasoline tax starts controversy on reservations

MELISSA SMITH

Collegian Reporter Tribal governments in Kansas face legislation based on racism, said Steve Cadue, elected tribal chairman of the Kickapoo Indian nation in Cadue's speech at noon Wednes-day in the K-State Union was presented as part of Native American Heritage Month.

The proposed legislation deals with asserting state law on Native Americans on Kansas reservations. He said the current controversy started because tribes were not assessing the full Kansas tax on gasoline sold on reservations. The senator who represents the district including the Kickapoo reservation introduced the legislation without consulting the Kickapoo, Cadue said.

Cadue wrote a letter to President

George Bush.

He received a letter from the White House postmarked March 5 signed by Mary McClure, special assistant to the president for intergovernmental affairs.

It confirmed that the U.S. Constitution and the Supreme Court recognize treaties with Indian nations as the supreme law of the land.

These treaties gave Indian nations the legal right to self-government and self-determination. Native Americans had been practicing selfgovernment with their own code of laws long before the white people came, Cadue said.

"Inherent sovereignty, to me, is the fact that the Indian people were here before the coming of any other man," he said.

As a condition of the territory of Kansas becoming a state, Kansas agreed it would never interfere with After the controversy surfaced, the internal matters of tribes already

Harald Prins, assistant professor in anthropology and American ethnic studies, said the rights of Native Americans are safeguarded by the federal government, but states feel uncomfortable with the idea of having pockets of land within their boundaries where state law does not

This leads to attempts to infringe upon the rights of Native Americans to govern themselves, he said.

Kickapoo Indians were originally located in eastern Michigan but were forced to move in the 1800s, he said.

Removal treaties were based on the American idea of manifest destiny, and Native Americans were pushed off their land because the United States wanted it, Cadue said.

Even after they were removed west of the Mississippi River, white settlers encroached upon the lands guaranteed to the Native Americans, Prins said.

Cadue said the Kickapoo nation has had a tribal enterprise that sells gasoline, among other things, on the reservation for about 14 years.

Since state law does not apply to the reservation, state tax does not apply either, he said.

The Kickapoo do, however, levy their own taxes on gasoline.

Income from the enterprise helps the Tribal Council provide services to the reservation, with programs for juveniles and the elderly and a variety of other programs, he said.

Because the U.S. Constitution gives Indian nations the right to control their own internal affairs, Cadue said he has called the legislation introduced to make state tax applicable to gasoline sold on the reservation unconstitutional and motivated by racism rather than economics.

Quality education about Native American people is the answer to problems faced from racially biased state legislation proposals, he said.

The curricula, he said, need to have more to do with the world of Native American people today and the realities they face.

"The senators and representatives are commonly thought of as the higher-educated and bettereducated, commonly thought of as the better representation of all of the communities, that is why they are at the Statehouse.

"But they really don't know a damn thing about Indian tribal selfgovernment, Indian treaties, Indian cultures and Indian values," he said.

New coach selected Tennis team falls to KU

Former SIU coach takes volleyball job

From Staff and Wire Reports

University officials have announced the hiring of Patti Hagemeyer as the school's new head volleyball coach. She comes to K-State after serving as the head coach at Southern Illinois the past two Hagemeyer led the Salukis to a two-year mark of 30-27. Prior to arriving at SIU, she served as an assistant coach at Notre Dame for three seasons.

"Patti Hagemeyer epitomizes the type of individual we are looking for at K-State," said athletic director Steve Miller. "She is a quality person with a quality background.'

Hagemeyer, 32, played collegiately at the University of Minnesota. Hagemeyer received her degree in physical education in 1981 at Minnesota, she then earned a master's degree in physical education from

Washington State in 1982.

Before arriving at Notre Dame, she had stops as an assistant coach at Augsburg College in Minneapolis, Florida State and Washington State.

"I'm very excited about the opportunity at Kansas State and to move into the Big Eight," Hagemeyer said. "It's a program where I feel I can come in and make a difference. I know Kansas State has had a great fan support in the past and I hope that continues.

"Leaving Southern Illinois was the toughest decision I have ever made,' she added. "But we have made great progress here and I feel I am leaving a good, solid program."

Team member Betsy Berkley said she felt nothing but admiration for the new coach.

"The team got a chance to meet with her about a week ago and we all came away feeling pretty good about in January after 11 years as the head her," she said. "We've been going a coach.

long time without a coach and I'm sure there's going to be some adjust-ment there, but it's about time we have somebody come in and really take charge of the program, and she can do that."

Berkley said Hagemeyer will be starting team practices next week at an unspecified time. However, Berkeley said there will be early-morning practices.

K-State Associate Athletic Director Jeff Schemmel headed up the selection process.

'We liked the intensity that she will bring to the program, as well as the (NCAA) Division I experience," he said. "She has personality that fits K-State and she is very highly thought of in collegiate volleyball

Coaches take different approaches into Final Four semifinal matchups

By the Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - The three coaches trying to unseat undefeated UNLV from the throne of college basketball agree it isn't an impossible

"They've certainly proven they're outstanding defensively, offensively and on the backboards," North Carolina's Dean Smith said during Wednesday's teleconference with the Final Four coaches. "I do think there's a great deal of pressure on them because everyone is saying they should win. That's a dangerous situation."

The Tar Heels (29-5) meet Kansas (26-7) in Saturday's first semifinal, with Duke (30-7) going against the Runnin' Rebels (24-0) in the second game at the Hoosier Dome.

The Rebels trounced Duke 103-73 in last year's title game.

"Duke has had some time to prepare, and after having lost by a great margin last year, they certainly have a great psychological advantage, although Vegas is probably going to have to play a little less than their best if anyone is to beat them," Smith said.

Kansas coach Roy Williams, no stranger to Duke as a former player at archrival North Carolina and a 10-year-assistant to Smith, agreed with his former mentor.

"I do think they're outstanding," Williams said of UNLV, seeking to be the first NCAA champion to repeat since UCLA in 1973. "Duke, the team they're getting ready to play, is not exactly chopped liver. They're a pretty good basketball team ... Knowing some of they're kids and they're staff, I think they'll be highly motivated.

"They don't feel good about what happened last year, so that will still be on their mind," Williams said. "Everybody expects Vegas to just walk out there and the game is going to be over with, but I don't think those Duke kids are going to look at it like that. It will have to be a night where they don't shoot as well from the outside, and your guards are going to have to be able to withstand the pressure."

"I'm not sure how you beat Vegas," said Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski. "You have to come up with a fairly simple game plan and give your kids an opportunity to be positive."

Coach Jerry Tarkanian's Rebels, who had to get a reprieve from NCAA sanctions to be able to defend its title, arrive with a school-record 45-game winning streak.

Tarkanian comes to the Final Four for the third time since 1987 with a veteran squad that includes four returning starters who have each ... but it's a matter of beating them."

Jordan now looks wise for sticking with 'Hawks

By the Associated Press

LAWRENCE - Just as his grandparents know where they were and what they were doing the moment they heard about Pearl Harbor, Adonis Jordan will never forget the instant he heard what the NCAA had done to Relaxing at a friend's house, he thought his world had been turned upside down.

"They came on with the news and said, 'NCAA hands Kansas a three-year probation,' and that's all they said. I didn't know what to think," Jordan said. "I didn't know what it meant."

A highly sought point guard in Reseda, Calif., Jordan just a few weeks earlier had committed to Kansas and its energetic rookie head coach, Roy Williams. But now came news of a three-year NCAA probation.

To a high-school kid, it sounded like his college career was being devoured before it could even begin. Was he headed for a place that wouldn't be on television or in the NCAA tournament until he was a senior? Would NCAA guards patrol the hallway?

"I was one phone call away from changing my mind," he said. The next day, Williams was California-bound.

'Coach Williams flew out, and we had a meeting. He explained the whole thing to me and my mom," Jordan said.

Williams' message was this: It's not as bad as it sounds. He assured the family the three-year probation included only a oneyear tournament ban and that Adonis' career would not necessarily be affected at all.

A great many other schools had been clamoring for Jordan. He had narrowed his list to Kansas and Seton Hall.

Josephine Jordan let her son make up his own mind.

"She told me to do whatever I thought would make me happy," he said. "I wasn't sure what I should do. So I decided to put my faith in coach Williams.

It was a decision that turned out to have direct bearing on Kansas' making an unexpected trip to the Final Four this week.

Jordan blossomed as a sophomore and was probably one of the most underrated players in the Big Eight this year. Averaging more than 12 points, he led the Jayhawks with 126 assists while making 38 steals. Quick enough to penetrate inside, he's also a dangerous three-point shooter who makes it tough for a defense to get settled.

Showing consistent improvement, he's one of the few players in Kansas history to have more than 100 assists in their freshman and sophomore years.

The NCAA's three-year probation came as a shock to everybody at Kansas, coaches, administrators and recruits alike.

The toughest aspect of the penalties was probably the recruiting restrictions placed on the program, not the one-year tournament ban. Jordan turned out to be the only prospect from the early signing period in the fall of 1988 who stuck with the Jayhawks.

scored more than 1,200 career points. "Four of my starters started three years ago when we went to the final eight. This is a veteran team. There's no question that's a positive," said Tarkanian. "There's so much pressure, as the year progresses the pressure seems to mount. I think there's mental fatigue more than physical fatigue. It was really good to get away from basketball for two days ... by Saturday we'll be ready to play."

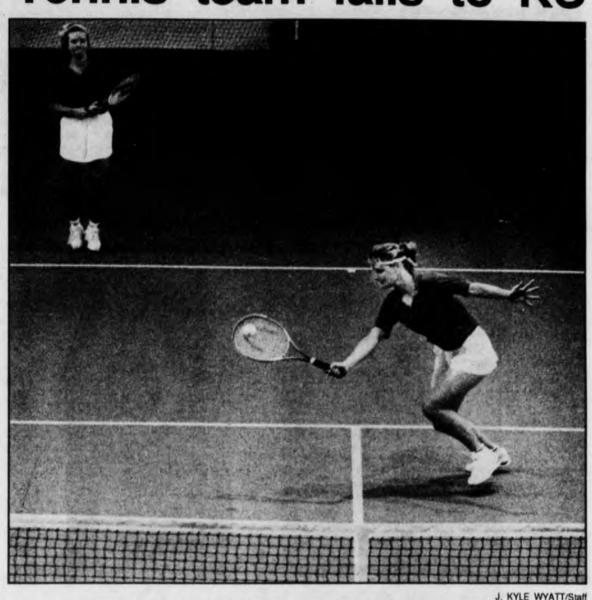

Meanwhile, Krzyzewski has been watching tapes.

"The more tape you watch, the more you get scared of them," he said. "We understand who UNLV is

The numbers explain the problems facing any team that goes against UNLV. The Rebels have beaten opponents by an average of 27.6 points per game, have led at halftime in all but one game this season and have trailed their opponents for only 54 minutes, 33 seconds of 1,360 minutes. played.

Their biggest deficit all season was 10 points, 16-6, to Fresno State in the title game of the Big West Conference tournament, and the Rebels went on to win that game by 24 "We have a real good basketball team but we're certainly not unbeatable," Tarkanian said.

Michele Riniker lunges for the ball as Thresa Burcham looks on during their 6-1, 6-2 win over Page Goins and Renee Raychaudhuri in doubles play Wednesday afternoon in Ahearn Field House.

Riniker picks up wins

TODD FERTIG Sports Reporter

Despite playing without its No. player, 13th-ranked Eveline Hamers, the University of Kansas women's tennis team handed the Wildcats a 7-2 loss in their first Big Eight dual of the spring.

With Hamers out due to injury, the Jayhawks were forced to compensate by shifting their lineup. At No. 1 singles, Michele Riniker downed Hamers' replacement, Rene Raychaudhuri, 4-6, 6-3, 6-3.

Riniker faltered in the first set against Raychaudhuri, but found control in the second, Coach Steve Bietau said.

"She quit trying to play the perfect game," Bietau said. "Rene is a good player, but she's not a great attacker. She gets most of her points by running down balls. Michele stopped trying to be too fine and then she loosened up.' Riniker also teamed with Thresa Burcham to beat Raychaudhuri and Page Goins at No. 1 doubles, 6-1, 6-2. Riniker and Burcham first teamed up over spring break and have won three of their last four. They have just been playing really well together, and this was the best doubles performance we've had this year," Bietau said. "When the other team seemed like they could make a run at them, they just seemed to pull together and keep things going.'

The Jayhawks edged out two three-set singles wins that helped them to the 7-2 margin. Neili Wilcox claimed the first set of her match with Goins 6-1, but Goins came back from down 4-2 to steal a 7-5 win in the second. With the momentum, Goins took the third set 6-2.

"Neili played pretty well in the match, but I think when Paige was down 4-2 she really let down a little," Bietau said. "Historically, she hasn't played that well under pressure, so when she got behind she let up a little and got things going her way. Then she seemed to get some of her confidence back."

At No. 5 singles, Angie Gover also edged out a first set win in a tiebreaker, 7-6 (7-5) over Abby Woods, Woods, however, won the next two sets and the match, 6-7, 6-4, 6-1.

Winning 7-2 despite the loss of Hamers was indicative of the depth of the Jayhawk squad, Bietau said.

The farther we dropped down in the lineup, the wider the margin of the scores," Bietau said. "I thought we had a chance to win two or three other matches but definitely didn't expect to win them all. KU's strong and very deep. I thought we showed some real improvement today."

athletic program put on probation Minnesota

By the Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS - Lou Holtz and Luther Darville, long gone from the University of Minnesota, still had an effect Wednesday when the NCAA placed the school on probation for two years and banned its football team from making a 1991 postseason appearance.

Some of the 17 rule violations cited by the NCAA Committee on Infractions involved the basketball and wrestling programs. The basketball team was stripped of one scholarship next year, and the wrestling team lost its right to interact with a campus wrestling club. A three-year investigation, which has already cost the university $462,000 and will amount to about $600,000 before all bills are paid, unearthed the violations. The probe was initiated only one month after the school received three years' probation in March 1988 for basketball and football violations that occurred primarily from 1982-86.

"I'm embarrassed personally and I'm embarrassed for the institution," said Rick Bay, men's athletic director. "I hope this is the last time we will all be meeting like this."

Minnesota could have been penalized much more severely, but the NCAA was lenient because the school cooperated and launched its own investigation.

"This is a unique case where it is appropriate to impose penalties that differ from the full set of minimum penalties otherwise required," the committee wrote in its 22-page report. "Further, the committee has determined that it is not appropriate to apply the minimum penalties for repeat violators to this case."

The university could have lost more scholarships, could have received postseason bans in all three sports and could have been kept off television. In addition, coaches could have been suspended or fired. Theoretically, the dreaded "death penalty" for repeat offenders could even have been imposed.

The committee found that Holtz, who left Minnesota for Notre Dame in November 1985, had given $250 cash to an athlete to pay for a course that allowed the athlete to remain eligible for competition.

Holtz also was found to have given between $25 and $40 to Roselle Richardson to reimburse the former quarterback for the loss of a wallet.

"I made two errors of judgment," Holtz said at a news conference at South Bend, Ind.

Most major infractions involved Darville, former acting director of the university's Office of Minority and Special Student Affairs.

Newman movie, 'Satellites' differ in styles

ERIC MELIN

Collegian Reviewer

It's an accepted fact that from sociology professors to music reviewers, people are products of their environment. Our surroundings determine our attitudes and behavior.

"Mr. and Mrs. Bridge," playing at the Westloop 6 theater, examines an upper middle-class married couple from Mission Hills, Kan. The story follows them from the early 1930s to the early 1950s.

Walter Bridge, played by Paul Newman, is a successful and conservative attorney. India, played by the Oscar nominee Joanne Woodward is a well-taken-care-of housewife who seldom thinks for herself.

Adapted from two novels by Evan Connell Jr., the movie is mainly a character study of the couple.

The Bridges live in a large, but traditional, house in the suburbs. They have three children and have dedicated much of their lives to giving them full opportunities in life. Thus, their relationship is hardly beyond casual.

Ruth, played by Kyra Sedgewick

("Born on the Fourth of July"), wants to go to New York to become an actress. At first, Walter is dismayed and refuses to let her go. Then he rethinks his decision and, in addition, gives her $1,000 to start her off.

Douglas, played by Robert Sean Leonard ("Dead Poets Society"), joined the Air Force, which at first was against his father's wishes. Walter relented, however, as he did when Carolyn, played by Margaret Welsh, wanted to marry a plumber.

Walter and India love their children but have a difficult time actually connecting with them. Walter Bridge treats them all like adults until they make a decision about their lives. Then, they are too young to decide. India Bridge, when confronted with the thought of explaining the birds and the bees to her children, instead gives them a little book called "Mysteries of Marriage.

India's best friend Grace Barron, played by Blythe Danner ("Brighton Beach Memoirs"), proves to be a parallel of what might happen to herself. As Walter said, "She has everything a woman could want, how can

When Grace starts to lose her mind, not even Mrs. Bridge can fathom why. She just watches, clueless, as her friend, disillusioned about the "real things" in her life, collapses.

Another friend of India's suggests she go to a therapist for some analysis. Since she can't communicate with her husband, she considers it in order to have someone to talk to. The film looks at why Mr. and Mrs. Bridge stay together and how the things going on around them shape their lives for them.

Director James Ivory has crafted a very realistic movie. He captures the feel of the period flawlessly. Unfortunately, the screenplay has something missing. Screenwriter Ruth Prawer Jhabvala had the immense task of combining two books into one movie. The characters can be understood, and most of what goes on seems justified, but it isn't very entertaining.

It's easy to see that "Mr. and Mrs. Bridge" has a lot to say about society and its trappings. But it avoids making harsh judgements by showing them as real people.

Newman, Woodward portray distant middle-class parents | Scottish band's new album full of deep, smooth music with American influence

REBECCA SACK Collegian Reviewer

The Scottish band, The Big Dish, has a new album of music without category.

"Satellites" is full of songs similar to many sounds, yet definitely something else.

The Big Dish was influenced by American writers and painters and post-punk bands, including the Talking Heads.

Stephen Lindsay, guitarist, keyboardist and lead vocalist for the band, claims his music's intent is to inspire and tingle. He accomplishes this with multiple and varied instruments: strings, guitars, slide guitar, bass, synthesized sounds, keyboards, piano and percussion. Words do not seem very important

Lindsay's voice offers an added dimension and credit to the music. He sings with a smooth and simple sound, which easily connects the realistic imagery of the lyrics with the complexity of the instrumental Reviewer says ...

The Big Dish is a more American version of Double, Peter Gabriel, Basia and the like. They have some country and blues influence too in songs like, "Give Me Some Time," and "25 Years."

Only one song, "Bonafide," has a pop sound similar to the sound of the Rembrandts. The rest of the songs are more typical of this album and include ominous synthesized sounds, blues, jazz, smooth and mellow music, and controlled guitar

"Satellites" has guest appearances from Manu Katche of Peter Gabriel's band, and Pino Palladino from Paul Young fame. Their music is still their own despite these talented contributions.

The best song of the album is "Learn to Love." This is the last song and begins with very emotive, deep keyboard sounds. The music is personal and emotional in the way Peter Gabriel's music tends to communicate.

In the midst of an incredible mix Lindsay sings, "Well I learned my lesson well, and the cold never hurt me. You get under my skin ... And so the fear that's in your soul could leave you. Now you know that I could learn to love you more."

The music swells and captures the listener then with the very inspiration and tingling after which Lindsay

On "Satellite," The Big Dish easily delivers this ideal sort of music.

Free health screening

ULRIKE DAUER

Collegian Reporter Manhattan-Ogden Schools will have a free screening for vision, hearing, general health and developmental milestones April 4 and 5.

Laura Clark, director of special services for Manhattan-Ogden Schools, said screening will include junction with Riley County Health standardized tests for children up to Department, Big Lakes Develop-

She said qualified personnel will be available to consult with parents. It is an opportunity to check if the growth and development of the children corresponds to their age,

The screening is sponsored by Manhattan-Ogden Schools in con-mental Center, and Social and Rehabilitation Services.

It's the second screening of this type, Clark said.

She said 66 families showed up at a trial run in December. The majority was fine, but six to seven children were found with problems and selected for preschool. Preschool is free in Manhattan.

Right now, about 40 appointments are set up, Clark said.

of children scheduled

"We do encourage people to call and make an appointment even though they think there are no problems," she said.

The screening will be from 5 to 8 p.m. April 4 and from 8 to 11:30 a.m. April 5 at 801 Poyntz Ave.

Appointments for the screening can be scheduled until Friday and from April 1 to 3.

New center relies on city, K-State

Job Corps complex to provide employment

BETSY HIDALGO

Collegian Reporter

Officials from the U.S. Department of Labor said the success of the Flinthills Job Corps Center currently under construction will rely on both Manhattan and K-State.

The Manhattan Chamber of Commerce had a news conference at 10 a.m. Wednesday to update the city of Manhattan on the center's developments.

The center will be the first of its kind in Kansas and will provide jobs for Manhattan residents, and K-State students and faculty.

John Douglas, labor department gional director said a complete high school - for economic or other reasons - to receive an education.

'If you are between the ages of 16 and 22 and did not receive your diploma, then you are eligible to attend," he said.

Dave Maranville, center director, said 90 percent of the money for the project will come from federal funding. James Purgason, project manager, said ground has been broken for the center's building one mile south of Fort Riley Boulevard by the Manhattan Airport. The $9.5 million center will have a campus-like atmosphere. center provides a place for people halls, a single-parent component to who did not get the opportunity to accompany 36 solo parents and their children, a child-development center for up to 40 infants and children and a recreational complex along with the academic buildings," he said. Manhattan and K-State are going to have to work together with the new center, Douglas said.

Douglas said because the whole concept of a job corps is focused on people and education, the center will be working closely with the College of Human Ecology and the College of Education.

Then-secretary of the labor department, Elizabeth Dole; former Gov. Mike Hayden; and Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., attended the dedication of the center in October 1990. The center is under construction and is expected to open in October 1992.

'Not only do we have the fun Easter egg hunt, but we also have a story to remind the children of the religious aspect of the season," Bauer said. "Even at their age, I think they receive the message that we try to convey about the season."

Shane Coyne, junior political science, read the Easter story

"We tell the story on their level so that they will be able to understand the Easter message," Coyne said. "I think that they understand there is a deeper meaning to the Easter season other than just the bunny and hunting for eggs.' Brian Dunn, sophomore in animal science, said FarmHouse has sponsored the event for 12 years. Shelly Potter, special projects' supervisor for Big Lakes, said this will probably be the last year for the

"Up until now, children with developmental disabilities were provided services through the Big Lakes programs," Potter said. "Next year, the public schools will start providing care for the children of ages 3-5, leaving only the much younger children for care at Big Lakes.

"Therefore," she said, "they will be a little too young to attend the Easter egg hunt."

"Education is the best way to introduce a child into this world and lead him through it," Ivy said. "As future teachers, it's our obligation to bring education alive for the students, and my heritage and art are ways I can do that.'

He said he thought everyone has some kind of creative means, some way to bring education alive for others, and it is just a matter of each individual taking the time to find particular talents or attributes.

He exhibited his talents as he drew for the class while Skelton read Native American stories, much like he did in his presentation at the center.

Skelton agreed that it's important for teachers to bring education alive for students and said she tries to do that with each of the students in her class at Metro.

"I've always had very different ideas about education and individualizing education," Skelton said. 'That's why I tried so hard to get my student teaching in a place like Metro. We deal completely with individualized education there."

She said she believes every child at one point in life has found something that has gotten him or her excited.

'A teacher needs to find that spark, let the spark get the ball rolling and then go with it," she said.

Skelton said teachers have to make a personal investment in students who come into their lives and into their classrooms. She said that's the only way to develop a trust relationship between the student and teacher.

Deering agreed with Skelton, telling her class that although they must all arm themselves with teaching strategies, they must at the same time disarm themselves and show vulnerability to establish a human, personto-person trust from the students.

"My students saw beyond a slight, young, unopposing boy with long hair," Deering said, "and saw someone who had the guts to talk to a room full of college students and have wonderful things to say.

"I'm hoping they will make a transfer from this experience and incorporate this into their teaching,"

Deering said another of her goals was to have created a lasting memory for the students.

Many students made comments like, "I'll never forget this" as they left the room, stopping to shake Ivy's hand as they left.

War memorial to be designed by competition

LORIE BYSEL Collegian Reporter

Riley County is sponsoring a design competition for an Armed Forces War Memorial, which will honor all Riley County residents who served in the U.S. Armed Forces.

"This is a coordinating effort of Riley County, the VFW and the American Legion," said Lynn La-Pointe, county landscape architect.

"We found out there had been an honor roll list of all the people who had served in World War I and II, and it was now in the basement of the county museum," said Mike Oppy, representative of the American Legion Post 17. "We thought these people deserve better than this, so we decided to get all the names of people in Riley County who've served in difficult situations."

"Anyone can enroll in the competition, either individuals or teams are encouraged to participate," LaPointe said. "We've had a lot of architecture and design majors from K-State, and also a lot of local people who aren't enrolled at K-State.'

Two Memorial sites have been selected at the Riley County Courthouse Plaza.

It may be located either near the flag poles on the front (south) lawn of the courthouse or attached to the arch in the courtyard area. They have decided not to disturb any of the trees that surround

The VFW and the American Legion initiated the idea to honor the Riley County residents, but it was my idea to offer it as a design competition," LaPointe said. The VFW and the American Legion are in charge of fund raising for the cost of the memorial, and LaPointe said they will not start fund raising until a design has been selected.

Submitted ideas must meet several requirements. It must be one board or two boards maximum, it must have enough room to include about 3,500 veteran's names on it and names of the designer(s) shouldn't be displayed on the board.

"You don't have to register. Anybody is welcome to submit an entry as long as it is by May 1," LaPointe said.

Five judges will review all the entries and recommend finalists to the Riley County Commissioners for selection of the top three

The first choice receives an $800 award; second place receives a $400 award; and third place receives a $200 award.

'We've had about 20 people register for the competition so far," Oppy said. "This is an architecture project and also an incentive to make a buck or two.

"It's nice that the county has been so receptive of this program," Oppy said. "I feel this is a

Collegian Reporter With warm weather comes the urge to ride a bike, a motorcycle that

There are a few preparations to make before bringing them out of

"You should store the battery inside, charge it once a month, put some gas stabilizer in the tank and drain the carbs," Vista said.

When bringing the bike out of winter storage, the battery should be put back in, the carburetor drain plugs tightened and the tire pressure checked, Vista said.

Ralph Brooks of Brooks Yamaha said he recommends changing the oil and filter and checking the battery connections, tire pressure, brakes and cables.

"You should check everything once from front to rear; safety is my biggest concern," Brooks said.

Tracy Harlow, senior in electrical engineering and owner of a 1987 Honda Hurricane, said he changed the oil and filters on his bike, checked the fluid levels and lubed the chain.

"It never sat for more than four weeks, and I intended to ride it, so I didn't have to do much to it," Harlow

Grant Nurnberg, senior in electrical engineering, said he rode his motorcycle when the weather was nice during the winter, so he didn't have much to do to his either.

"Usually after the winter, I change

The biggest concern of the mechanics and riders alike is the leftover sand on the streets.

"Be aware of sand on the corners, if you go around one too fast, you will fall down," Brooks said.

"The sand on the corners makes it pretty slick out there," Harlow said.

As a final caution, Brooks said people in cars aren't used to seeing motorcycles out, and riders should be extra careful.

"They aren't watching for you, so be careful and don't ride in their blind spot," Brooks said.

MACA to use music, dance to promote peace

CINDY BRIGGS

Collegian Reporter

Manhattan Alliance on Central America is bringing a celebration for peace in El Salvador through native music and dance to Manhattan at 8:30 p.m. tonight at the Osage House.

MACA Programming Director Marlene Howell, instructor of women's studies, said MACA serves the Manhattan community by providing information about Central America.

The organization is also working to bring about a justified U.S. foreign policy in Central America. Howell said MACA believes most Americans, if they knew what was happening in El Salvador, would disagree with the U.S. foreign policy.

"We oppose using U.S. military power to bring about foreign policy," she said. "We promote policies that recognize the history, the culture and the political realities of poor countries, and don't impose the imperialism of our wealth.'

Howell said MACA decided to have the dance when it heard Oncenoviembre, a Salvadorian dance band, was currently touring the United States. They invited the band to Manhattan so the community could take part in a celebration of Salvadorian culture.

"The more we understand about a people's culture and history, the more we understand some of the politics historically and culturally. Then we can get an idea of the kind of social change that would be most meaningful in the lives of the people experiencing the change," she said.

Howell said the call for peace in El Salvador comes from an ongoing war between the people and their government.

She said the U.S. foreign policy has supported the Salvadorian military, which MACA says has brought oppression upon the people.

That has more often than not meant we have supported a military that has tortured and murdered many of its poor," she said. "Basically anybody who spoke out against human rights violations has been a target for the Salvadorian military."

The band will share music to the public not commonly heard in Manhattan. Howell said there will also be information on El Salvador and MACA.

"In Latin America, unlike our country, celebration and struggle go together. Music is an inherent part of the political voice," she said. "They celebrate their political actions, their advancement as a people and their survival as a people. Its a celebration of who they are."

MACA Chairman Stan Cox, adjunct associate professor of agronomy, said the dance tonight has two

The first purpose is to have a good time and give people on campus a chance to hear music from El Salvador," he said. "The second purpose is to raise money for some of the humanitarian projects of this group." Cox said although they are asking for a donation of $5, they aren't requiring participants to donate.

"We want people to come no matter what they can give," he said.

Senate decides on fees

Rec Services fee increase earns approval after debate

ANDREW CAPPS

Collegian Reporter Prior to Thursday night's Student Senate meeting, the senators knew they were in for a long Debates concerning four proposed fee increases were heard and voted on by Senate.

After three and a half hours of debate on the Recreational Services fee increase, Senate passed one of the four proposed fee increases by a vote of 46-5. The proposal by the Student Finance Committee was to increase the recreational service fee to $8 for full-time students, $3.50 cents for part-time students and 70 cents for summer students. Derek Nelson, chairman for the council of the bill, amended the proposal to be increased to $9 for full-time students. Nelson's proposal was rejected.

Senate did, however, approve the proposal to increase the fee.

This, Rec Services claims, will allow them to maintain the quality of the facilities, allow additional funding for an increase in minimum wage rates, and maintain or replace worn-out equipment. The new fee will help pay for both operational costs and equipment costs.

Rec Services Director Raydon Robel said, after adoption of the $2 increase, "I think we could have worked to justify the $3 (increase). But, we'll work with it and do our best."

Nelson opened debate on the proposal by using statistics and user surveys to justify the need for an additional increase.

"The need has obviously been shown," Nelson said. "Our constituency say 'we want more, we want more.' We cannot expand our services, but we can constantly upgrade our services." Nelson said the services should be provided for the students. ■ See REC, Page 12

Student Publications gets OK for 1 of 2 fee increases

ERWIN SEBA Staff Reporter

Student Senate passed a new fee shortly after 12:30 this morning to replace the aging computer equipment at Student Publications Inc.

Later this morning, Senate defeated a proposed line-item increase to be used for operating costs for Student Publications.

After two and a half hours of discussion and debate, senators adopted the equipment fee on a 49-4 roll-call vote.

Beginning in fall semester 1991, full-time students will pay $3.90 per semester and part-time students will pay $1.95 per semester for the equipment fee. Of those amounts, $3.20 from the full-time per semester fee and $1.65 from the part-time per semester fee will go to pay back a certificate of participation obtained by the Student Governing Association.

The certificate of participation will be used by SGA to purchase the new equipment, which Student Publications Director Ron Johnson said could be in use as early as late August.

In effect, the certificate of participation will act as a loan made by SGA that Student Publications will pay back from the proceeds from the fee.

The remaining 60 cents from the full-time fee and 30 cents from the part-time fee will be used to pay for the repair, replacement, maintenance and insurance of the equipment.

As part of the bill enacting the fee, Senate is requiring Student Publications to purchase replacement-cost insurance for the duration of the certificate of participation.

After the certificate of participation is paid off, the fee will be reduced. At that time, full-time students will pay $1.60 per semester and part-time students will pay

Prices may rise at K-State Union

Labor costs affect due to the increase in prices, not micost of food, drink

PAUL NOEL Staff Reporter

It may cost a little more to eat at the K-State Union Monday.

Becky Lind, cash sales manager of the Union Stateroom, said food and drink prices will rise to keep up with the increased cost of salaries caused by the increase in minimum wage.

"Cold beverages will rise 5 cents and refills will raise a dime," Lind Malley Sisson, director of Food Services, said she will give the recommendation of the food price increases to Union Director Jack Sills for his approval today.

"Most people would probably end up paying 10-15 cents more per meal with the increase," she said.

Sisson said she also anticipates a maximum increase of 10 percent for all catered functions.

"The increase is something we re-ally don't want to do," she said. "But we feel that everybody has to share the load in this. "The Union, as a whole, has to generate 94 percent of its own budget," she said. "We have to be as self-supporting as possible. And that's a challenge. Food and soft drinks from the vending machine are not expected to increase until May, said Bill Wisdom, manager of Vending Services. Wisdom said the rise in minimum wage will not affect Vending Services as much as it will affect Food Services or the Union Bookstore. He said the May increase will be nimum wage.

Increases in other food items are decided by comparing prices of other restaurants, Lind said.

"Normally, we make price changes relative to food cost," she said, "but when we have a major increase we have to look at other things to help us out."

Lind said although they compare the Union's prices with the prices of its competitors, they don't try to undercut the competition.

"We look at our competitors' costs to decide if we need to raise, leave or lower our prices," she said.

Kay Farley, manager of the Union Bookstore, said although the minimum wage increase will greatly affect the Union Bookstore, it will not increase prices.

"We're looking for cutbacks without sacrificing customer service," Farley said.

The Union Bookstore is in the process of reorganizing work schedules, without creating any layoffs, she

The Union Station will also closely monitor labor to compensate for the increase in minimum wage, said Teto Henderson, Union Station manager.

"The only prices the Union Station will increase is the pop prices," he said. "In fact, I may lower one or two items on the menu."

Sweeping three of four categories, the K-State quadrathlon team won top honors in Des Moines earlier this

The team, made up of Jon Bruning, Scott Schultz, John Woodbury and Vaughn Studer, all seniors in animal sciences and industry, placed first in the oral presentation, quiz bowl and the written exam to dominate the contest.

The regional quadrathlon contest, entered by 13 teams, was held in conjunction with the Midwest section of the American Society of Animal Science, which meets each year in Des Moines, Iowa.

Jack Riley, head of the animal sciences department, was pleased with the team's results.

"This is by far the best that K-State has ever placed since the competition was initiated," Riley said.

Ernie Minton, who coordinated the preliminary contest at K-State, determining entry in the regional contest, said he was also impressed with the team's preformance.

"Regional rules prevent any coaching by University faculty or staff. The team took the initiative and prepared for the contest by their previous experiences and anticipated their weaknesses. They did very well," Minton said.

Scott Schultz said he felt the check for her efforts.

performance.

"We were pretty cool," Schultz said. "We went into the contest with the attitude that we would do the best we could. The farther we got into the contest, the better the outlook was for us to win the contest. Monday, when we won the finals of the quiz bowl, we knew we had it clinched."

For winning the contest, each team member received a feeds and nutrition textbook.

K-State was also recognized in several other categories at the conference.

Dave Nichols, animal sciences and industry professor, was awarded the Outstanding Young Teacher Award. The award, given each year to an animal science educator who is under 40 years of age. Along with the recognition, Nichols received a cash award of $500.

Julie Bartlett, senior in animal sciences and industry, competed in the undergraduate paper competition. The contest required Barlett to make a 12-minute presentation about the research she completed, and then field questions from a panel of judges for three minutes.

"I am really glad that it's over," Bartlett said. "The past ten months of research have been tough, but placing third helped to make it more worthwhile."

Barlett received a plaque and a $25

The police officers involved in the beating of Rodney King have given a black eye to many officers who treat their job with dignity and respect, said Capt. Charles Beckom of the K-State Police. "It's a travesty and shouldn't have ever happened," Beckom said. Many police officers are being categorized with those involved in the attack, he said. The March 3 incident, which involved several Los Angeles police officers beating a black motorist, has promoted a national outrage against racism and police brutality.

Kyle said he was dismayed that such a large number of officers would allow the attack take place. He said he was concerned the beating might not be an isolated case in

Officers are the control mechanism for the rules society develops, Beckom said.

Everyone thinks police officers are something above the average human, which places them in an awkward position because they're scrutinized for everything they do, he said.

Beckom said it's difficult to determine how an officer will behave in the future because each has a clean background and appears to be reasonable and honest when hired. One of three negative things can happen to a police officer, Beckom said. The officer can go bad, become dishonest or do something under certain conditions contrary to what they're suppose to do. These things happen in every profession,

Junkies to be ousted from parliament

BERN, Switzerland (AP) - Switzerland, which generally takes a liberal stand on illegal drug abuse, says it will no longer tolerate junkies next door to its federal parliament building.

The Bern city council, in talks Wednesday with a government delegation headed by Federal President Flavio Cotti, agreed to move the capital's drug sanctuary to another place next month. Drug use is not technically legal in Swiss sanctuaries, but police don't apply the law there.

Hawkers, heroin addicts and hangers-on shifted to the new location last fall after Bern authorities closed a previous sanctuary.

Trial date set for LAPD officers

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Four police officers were ordered Thursday to stand trial May 13 for the beating of an unarmed black man that was captured on videotape.

The officers agreed to the trial date in a brief court appearance, but a defense attorney said afterward he might need more time. Attorney Paul DePasquale said he thought the prosecution was rushing the case to trial, possibly because of publicity surrounding the March 3 beating.

Civil rights and community groups have called for an overhaul of the force and the resignation of Chief Daryl Gates. A grand jury is investigating the conduct of 21 other officers who watched the beating. Sgt. Stacey Koon, 40, and Officers Wind, 30, Laurence Powell, 28, and Theodore Briseno, 38, are charged with assault with a deadly weapon and unnecessarily beating a suspect.

Koon and Powell also are charged with filing a false police report. Koon is additionally accused of being an accessory in a cover up.

The two 20-year-old men, one a student at KU, face federal charges of using explosives at an institution receiving federal funds, said Jeff Lanza, an FBI spokesman in Kansas City. The charge carries a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison.

The arrests were made a short time after the pipe bomb was found under a campus police car and moved to a nearby field. The police car was parked about 50 feet from Joseph R. Pearson

A car windshield and a lobby window in the back of the dormitory were broken by fragments from the bomb. No injuries were reported.

The pipe bomb, described as about 8 inches by 3 inches and equipped with a timer and battery, was discovered about 3:30 a.m. under the campus police car. It was found by a campus officer after he saw someone run away from the car.

Landowners fight to save old trees

DERBY (AP) - One family lost a round in court, but other landowners are using a new weapon in a fight to save their trees from a city sewer project.

Sedgwick County District Judge David Dewey, shaking his head and saying he hated to see 150-year-old trees bulldozed, ruled Wednesday the city had done nothing wrong in the way it proceeded to condemn Henry Phillips' land.

Phillips owns about eight acres of land that runs along Spring Creek in the southeast Kansas town. A K-State forestry expert testified some burr oak trees on the Phillips' land are very old and the woodsy environment contains 15 different species of trees.

The $2.5 million sewer project has been a major source of controversy at Derby City Council meetings for months. Residents are generally in agreement the project is needed to accommodate a growing population. But the disagreement arises over the part of its path in south Derby that threatens trees and wildlife.

Proposed bill to tighten law

Tougher penalties, tighter blood alcohol limits ahead for drunken driving violators

DAVID PRITCHARD

Collegian Reporter

People who have a few drinks after work may want to think twice before driving home.

A bill that will toughen drunken driving laws has passed the Senate and will now go to the House of Representatives for approval.

The bill would lower the legal limit of blood-alcohol percentage for Driving Under the Influence from .1 percent to .08 percent.

At the same time, a bill that would make make it a misdemeanor crime for a person to drive if he has a bloodalcohol percentage between .05 percent and .1 percent has passed the House and has gone to the Senate.

The bill was voted down in a judiciary subcommittee and will probably not make it to the floor of the Senate, said Sen. Lana Oleen, R-

The original House bill also lowered the legal limit to .08 percent, but was amended because of possible overcrowding of jails, said Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan.

"We wanted a way for people to be punished and get education about drinking and driving without the overcrowding problem," Hochhauser said.

Driving while impaired would not require a jail sentence but would impose a $50-$200 fine and mandatory attendence of alcohol safety school, said Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan.

"The evidence seems clear that people are impaired at lower alcohol levels. People must be more diligent and aware with drinking and driving," he said. "Even in our state, a high percentage of accidents are alcohol-related.'

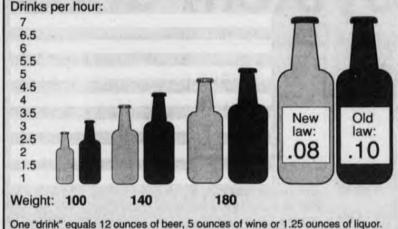

Glasscock said the proposals would make Kansas one of the stricter states in the nation.

County Attorney Bill Kennedy said he believes the proposals will help decrease the amount of drunken drivers and make it easier to prose-

Sgt. K.W. Padgett of the Riley County Police Department said he thinks the proposals would have a positive effect.

"People who are .10 or a little over are the most dangerous drivers on the road," Padgett said. "Most are ap-

Sessions help transfer students

Community college representatives meet former students, K-State administration

MARLA ROCKHOLD

Collegian Reporter

To help make the transfer experience better for students, K-State had a community college conference Thursday in the K-State Union.

Wendy Wilborn, assistant director of admissions, said about one-third of the students enrolled at K-State have transferred from a community college, two-year college or another four-year university.

"There can be a lot of frustration when transferring - especially when there is not a lot of information," she said. Wilborn said there was an exceptional turnout for the conference.

Representatives from 19 Kansas community colleges, two out-ofstate community colleges and twoyear colleges attended the confer- outs; and student activities and serence, she said.

"The purpose of the conference is twofold," she said. "First of all, community colleges want a chance to get feedback from former students, and second, they can interact with the administration and professors at K-

Wilborn said, "We want to make sure the community colleges and the University have a good working relationship."

In the morning, she said, the representatives attended sessions and discussions about dealing with problems and concerns students may have before transferring.

Some of these problems and concerns include degree requirements at K-State; making sure hours transfer; financial aid and scholarships; quiz vices available, she said.

The afternoon, Wilborn said, was set up so the representatives could meet with their former students, faculty from the individual colleges and departments or take a campus

Before the conference, all transfer students were sent a questionnaire asking about their experiences at both colleges and were asked to meet with the representative from the college they transferred from.

Wilborn said there was not a big response. Only about 350 of 5,496 students responded.

Lynn Simpson, director of guidance services at Pratt Community College, said, "The visits and questionnaires are very important and

"We always need to listen closely," he said. "They (students) are the ones we serve.

"We try to find out how students are doing and what problems occur," Simpson said. "This will help them (at Pratt) try to do a better job of getting them (students) ready to make the transfer easier.'

Louis Pivonka, career and placement counselor at Barton County Community College, said, "One of the things we're finding out is they miss the one-on-one basis. As far as advising, we hold their hand a little Wilborn said, from reading through all the questionnaires sent back to her and doing some research, she feels the colleges are successful in preparing students to transfer.

Bodywrapping ineffective, unsafe

LORI STAUFFER

Staff Reporter

Bodywrapping, a service provided by Crimpers Hair Design Studio, may not be a healthy way to lose unwanted inches, according to the Food and Drug Administration.

The process of wrapping a customer's entire body in cotton cloth strips soaked in a solution simply does not work, and it does not have FDA approval, said Julia Heugley, FDA public affairs specialist.

"In order to have FDA approval, the process must first be safe. There has been no evidence to prove this to be true," she said. "Second, it must be effective and this has not been proven either."

Set-N-Me-Free, the company that makes the product Crimpers uses, advertises that the solution of aloe vera and herbs penetrates through the pores of the skin and cleanses the body of toxins by loosening fatty deposits and cellulite. The toxins then dissolve into the lymph system.

A spokesman for Set-N-Me-Free said the solution is allnatural with vitamins and minerals.

He also said the product does not fall under the jurisdiction of the FDA

Larry Noble, head of the department of physical education and leisure studies, said he was surprised there were businesses practicing this weight-loss method in Manhattan.

"This practice was popular about 10 years ago and was subsequently driven off the market," he said. "I was surprised that we have someone still doing this today."

Carol Hackerott, nutritionist and exercise physiologist, said the business can make cosmetic claims about bodywrapping, but because the process is therapeutic, it should be FDA approved.

"Because it penetrates the skin pores and if it really does what they claim, it would be classified as a prescription drug. Aloe is not a prescription drug," she said.

Crimpers, said there is no chemical drug involved and the procedure was not meant to be medicinal in any way. "So far, the bodywrap has had good results. No one has had any side effects," Davies said. "It is purely cosmetic."

Heugley said the claims of losng 3 to 18 inches by wrapping the body are not true.

"The effect is purely temporary. There may be inches lost immediately after being wrapped tight in a bandage, but 30 minutes later, even a few minutes later, the inches will return," Heugley said.

"The only place you lose is in your wallet," she said. Noble said even if the loss was permanent, the cause of the loss should be of concern. "Any loss in inches this way will induce tissue dehydration and traumatize the cells with a detrimental effect," he said.

Hackerott disputed the claim that the process loosens and detoxifies fatty deposits and cellulite.

"There are only fat cells. There are no special cells or different fat cells called cellulite," she said.
"The claim that it flushes out the fatty deposits is impossible. There is research upon research that has found that fat cells can only increase or decrease in size.

Hackerott said the only way to decrease the number of cells is through surgery, such as liposuction.

She also questioned the recommendation of drinking a gallon of water to flush out the so-called toxins after the bodywrap.

"First of all, fat is not a toxin. It is necessary to the body. And, if the toxins were fat soluable, water wouldn't flush them out of the system anyway," she said.

"There are so many holes in this theory," Hackerott said.

'They are just giving their opinion. They don't know what they are talking about," the spokesman for Set-N-Me-Free said. "There is no research out there that says this doesn't work. Wida Davies, esthetician at It does work. We've seen the

K-State greek system does have problem

ments concerning the views of my contemporary columnists to my roommates, the front porch or myself. But in this particular case, I think a great injustice has been done to the subject, and although it may seem like a dead horse, please try to bear with me while I beat it a little longer in hopes of finding some truth.

If you haven't already guessed it, I'm taking issue with my fellow columnist's recent article "K-State greeks avoid losses." Although there may have been minute shreds of a position spy-coded somewhere within the column, the brunt of the logic is about as sturdy as gelatin, not quite as tasty and perhaps more transparent. Here's what I mean.

From the beginning of the column in question, we are asked - or rather told - that we "have to admit" we are incredibly lucky as K-State students, whether we are "greek" or "non-greek" (with both labels having a wealth of convenient sub-divisions). Besides being immediately turned off by the whole idea of pseudo-labels, I was curious to know just exactly who has "got it pretty good at K-State." So, I stiffened my resolve and started nibbling on the next paragraph.

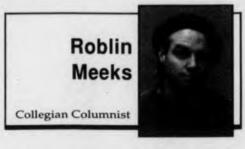

The entire column was based on a shaky comparison between the K-State greek system and the infamous greek system at the University of Texas at Austin, outlined in an article by Skip Hollandsworth in the March usually reserve my editorial com- 1991 issue of Texas Monthly. Call it fate, call it luck or call it coincidence - I just happened to run across the article myself.

Granted, the UT greek system is wildly out of control. Granted, an intoxicated member of the UT Beta Theta Pi fraternity plunged to his death. Granted, it was not uncommon to attend a Sigma Chi party and read such cute party decorations like: "Roses are red, or-chids R black, I like my date, when she's on her back," or for a more simple slogan: "F---Yer Date." Clear-cut cases of machismo gone

While the intentions of the UT Sigma Chis are definitely far from in question, the applications of this scenario to our own situation at K-State is a little more dim. If I gauge the reasoning right, it goes something like this: "Boy, those greeks at UT sure are awful bad, good thing K-State's aren't like that. Well, if -State isn't that bad, it must be good."

I'll agree with the fact that UT's greeks just can't be topped. They're the paradigm of fratrat bad boys. But if the column's reasoning holds true, then someone like Ted Bundy would be considered a really great guy next to someone like say, Satan, for example. Still, I don't think Bundy should be awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. Or, because Dan Quayle hasn't gotten caught in the middle of some scandal, he must be a better (and therefore good) politician than Richard Nixon. Does it all seem a little funny to you, too? (As a hint, just because something seems better by comparison doesn't make it good in itself, by any

It is true, however, that at K-State we don't hear daily reports of vulgar party graffiti or newly decapitated chickens used as basketballs. That's good as far as I'm concerned, but there shouldn't be any reports like that anywhere, anyway. But that aside, a good question would indeed appear to be: "Why them and not us?"

Some would like to think that at UT, they aren't governed like they are here, that the fratemities don't belong to an Interfraternity Council. I'd agree if they were right, but the 28 social fraternities at UT do just happen to be members of IFC. So, that's probably not it.

Some also claim the Panhellenic and Interfraternity councils have the ability to punish fratemities and sororities by restricting them from such covetous activities as parties with other greek organizations, participation in homecoming and Greek Week and involve-ment in intramurals. That's true, the councils

So, returning to my original question, who do hand down sentences and sanctions.

But, I personally know of fraternities and sororities that were banned from activities like these and not only said, "So what?", but added another party to the agenda in celebration. Being put on probation means no functions with others, it doesn't mean no date parties. Also, a few houses don't anually participate in homecoming or Greek Week anyway, so taking it away isn't cruel and unusual by any means. If houses are barred from intramurals, it means no competition in greek leagues. Simple solution: enter house teams in independent leagues. Gee, kids, can you say "loopholes"? I knew you could.

Apart from all of these facts, hazing happens at K-State. I know it does, for a fact. Several freshmen who can't sleep for one solid week know it. Others who clean house Friday nights until 4 a.m. know it, too. The guy who almost died from falling intoxicated off his house just last year at K-State knows accidents do happen here, too.

So what is the difference between K-State and UT? Is it that there they die, and here they just get hurt badly? Or is it that the events at UT, because of their wide fame, are just spoken a little louder? You decide. Ironically, though, it makes me wonder how many greek organizations on various campuses across the country are justifying their goodness by how

So, returning to my original question, who has got it pretty good after all? I don't think it's the pledges who still get hazed and alienated in their first semester, sometimes first year, of college (even if it isn't as bad as last year or before probation — that's not the point). I also don't think it's the sororities either, a couple of them have been caught in the past few years for hazing activities as well, and they do a good job of alienating people in their own right. And no, I don't think it belongs to the people who gave up some of their freedoms to join greek houses and be governed by Barb Robel, whatever that could mean. I think the people who really have got it good are those who could care s a final note, I have many close friends who have chosen to live in fraternities and sororities, and I am not trying to indict them or the K-State greek system in any way by making sweeping generalizations. I'm simply worried that if people continue to spout halftruths, our campus could, if it isn't already, become too comfortable with a greek system that does have current serious and palpable problems, believe it or not.

As the old Alcoholics Anonymous standard goes, the first step on the road to a solution is admitting you have a problem. K-State greek system, we have a problem.

Schools need efficiency

Financial problems have caused three programs to be dropped at Emporia State University.

Students will have to go elsewhere if they want a degree in home economics, family sciences and fashion merchandising.

This was a smart - but difficult - decision on the part of the officials at Emporia State, and one others should probably follow.

With the state education system in the financial mess it's in, all state universities and colleges need to re-evaluate their programs and see where cuts can be made. Universities need to continue to realize funds are not always available, and streamlining education is a good solution when there is a lack of funds.

This is not to say streamlining is good in all situations, but it is when there is lack of funds and a program is offered at other state institutions.

Emporia State's students in the cut programs will be the losers in the end, but phasing out programs is better than cutting them cold. Emporia State will offer classes in these programs for three more years.

Prospective students wanting one of these three degrees will now have to look at the state's other universities. Hopefully, the other universities' programs will continue to improve and accomodate these incoming students.

During these rough financial times for higher education in Kansas, K-State and the other state universities should streamline their budgets by considering the elimination of duplicate programs that are not

Raborn's campaign targets two issues

Editor,

The election for the Manhattan City Commission is April 2. Craig Raborn, as all students should know, is running in this election as a representative of the student population. Since there are about 20,000 students at K-State, we need representation. I encourage all students to support him.

Part of his platform is to get a public transportation system started. I am in strong support of this because of the parking problem in Manhattan, and more so, the problem on campus. He is also in support of a mandatory rental inspection program, of which the city is in drastic need.

No current city commissioner is willing to take action on either of these issues. It is time we, as students, take part in politics and elect someone who will help us. If we would join together, we could do something to help ourselves and future students at K-State.

Interestingly enough, less than six months after Bell's death, a 16-year-old girl named Erica Richardson of Maryland died from a safe, legal abortion, which she acquired without her parents' consent or knowledge. Neither of these conditions is necessary in Maryland.

In closing, we do not deny that women can die from illegal abortions, however the actual numbers are much, much smaller than the pro-choice side is willing to claim. And we cannot fool ourselves into thinking these deaths justify this terrible holocaust that destroys 4,000 children a day. ### Rock chalk, Jayhawk

I would like to commend David Svoboda, Collegian sports page editor, on his article about the University of Kansas' basketball team. His honest feelings were showing through his purple skin. Kansas has a great team and is coached by Roy Williams, who should be named Coach of the Year.

K-Staters should join the bandwagon this weekend and show their support for the Big Eight and the state of Kansas.

KU, once again, is dribbling and slamming home the fact there is more to Kansas than Dorothy and cows to the rest of the United States. And come Saturday, as the faint whispers of "Rock Chalk, Jayhawk" come from the east winds into our ears, let's respond with purple pride - Go KU!

Prank injures campus worker in explosion

Custodian finds chemicals, police search for prankster

Steve Galitzer, campus public safety assistant, was injured in an apparent prank Thursday in the K-State Chemistry/Biochemistry Building.

Tim Howard, a custodial worker, discovered chemicals that were making small sparks in a trash can in the men's restroom.

"I went into the restroom to pick up the trash," Howard said. "As I picked the container up, a big explosion occurred and I dropped the container. Someone heard the noise and ran into the bathroom and I was just standing there holding my

"That was the supervisor - she called the safety people," he said. "They started to investigate and others came in. I gave him (Galitzer) the trash bag. The explosion caught him in the face and eyes."

Galitzer sustained injury to his eyes, but officials are unable to determine the extent of the injury, said Joseph Paukstelis, professor of

"I don't know how Steve Galitzer is doing, but we do know there is some injury to his eyes," Paukstelis said. "We do know that the explosion occurred near his face.

"He did have a burning sensation in his eyes," he said. "He could see at the time, at least that's what he said. But we don't know if there's going to be any permanent damage. I'm sure it started out as a prank, but at this stage it isn't any longer. It's a very serious situation."

The explosion was caused by a compound of two common chemicals that are highly explosive. The chemicals, if filtered through paper, will ignite and cause small flames. The filter papers and paper towels left in the trash can with the chemicals would have ignited and started a fire if they hadn't been discovered, Paukstelis said.

The compound is commonly used as a prank, he said, but it is usually prepared in pieces the size of a match head. A piece that size will make a bang similiar to a firecracker. But, a cake the size of a silver dollar was found in the

"When properly handled, it is not dangerous," Paukstelis said. "In this instance, it was put in a place where it would be discovered by someone. If anyone saw it, they would pick it up, which is what Steve did. He picked it up and it exploded."

After Howard originally discovered the chemicals, Paukstelis and Galitzer spent half an hour searching the building and laboratories, trying to locate the source of the chemicals. They found traces, but decided to just collect it and dispose

We didn't check particularly carefully," Paukstelis said. "We had no real reason to be extremely thorough at that time.

"I went back across the street," he said, "and five minutes later, the ambulance appeared."

At this time, the trash bag exploded in front of Galitzer's face.

The chemicals police said they think were used to prepare the compound were found in room 234. They also found a pair of gloves possibly used by the person. Officials are planning to lift prints from the gloves in order to identify the person responsible.

The smoking task force presented three tenative proposals for limiting smoking in the K-State Union at the Union Governing Board meeting Thursday night.

Dennis O'Keefe, junior in journalism and mass communications and board chairperson, said the smoking task force had its first meeting March 4 to discuss initial plans.

The first proposal would phase out smoking on a yearly basis, starting with the second floor and eventually going to the ground floor.

"We can look at the second proposal in two ways — either we keep smoking or we get rid of it," he said. "If we keep it, then we could have a lounge down by the bookstore or on the first floor extended out by the windows. There's a lot of room down

The third proposal would have smoking allowed in the recreational area three nights a week. Two nights would be non-smoking. This would be in effect during league bowling

O'Keefe stressed that the task force is in standing committee and that these are unofficial proposals. He said the task force will have the proposals written for the April 16

In other business, Union Director Jack Sills said a rule that hasn't been strictly enforced was implemented again last Friday.

The rule states no one without a K-State ID can use the services. He said junior and senior high-school students have been frequenting the recreational area Friday and Saturday nights, making it difficult for University students to use the services.

Sills also expressed concern about the proposed line fee that was before Senate. He said originally UGB had asked for an $8 increase. The proposal now is $5.

"If we don't get the increase, then services will have to be cut," Sills said. "I don't see how anyone could look at what we have and reject it."

funded.

Clint Rankin, animal health officer of the Kansas Racing Commission, said the proposals K-State submitted were chosen because they emphasized areas of medical research where the industry is having losses.

K-State also had the advantages of already having the personnel, equipment and facilities to do research.

The five principal investigators are all faculty members of the College of Veterinary Medicine: Gabbert, M. W. Dryden, Polly Schoning, M. M. Chengappa and David Bruyette.

Rankin said greyhound racing is big in Kansas.

needed to reduce the number of injuries on the track and to help greyhound farms to function better," Rankin said.

Gabbert said there are four themes to be researched: the muscular and skeletal systems, immunology and infectious diseases, reproduction and endocrinology and nutrition.

Thinclads to compete in home outdoor meet

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

This weekend's KSU Invitational and Multi-Event meet provide the track team with an opportunity to gain experience and a feel for its standing at the open of the outdoor Having completed indoor competition about a month ago, the team looks to the invitational to prepare for upcoming meets.

"Everybody's really looking to get a performance under their belt before going to the Texas Relays and some of the other big meets," Coach John Capriotti said. "We want to run a race as sort of a tune-up and to get a feeling of who's ready to go to Texas."

The two-day event at R.V. Christian Track is the squad's only home appearance of the season. The meet begins at 10 a.m. Saturday with field events, and running events will begin at 11 a.m. The men's decathlon will start at 10:30 a.m. and the women's heptathlon will begin at 11 a.m. Sunday.

Partial squads from some Big Eight schools, including Kansas and Nebraska will be in attendance, as well as Emporia State, Pittsburg State, and several junior colleges.

Capriotti said the meet combines good competition and an atmosphere of preparation. Several athletes prepare for upcoming performances by participating in events that are not their usual area of competition, he said.

"Our distance runners will probably be running in some shorter races and some of our sprinters will be running in relays, just something to get them in a race to see what kind of position they're in for next week," Capriotti said. "This is a perfect meet

'Some of our throwers haven't thrown this year and need this experience to see where they're at. We are real anxious to get this season go-ing," Capriotti said. "We're expecting some cooler weather for the weekend, but we expect to get in some good competition no matter what the conditions.'

Several key members of the team will not be in action this weekend. Jared Storm, the K-State record holder for the indoor 1,000-meter run, will redshirt the season due to an ankle injury. All-American Clifton Etheridge, last year's Big Eight champion in long jump and triple jump, will redshirt as well.

NCAA 10,000-meter champion Janet Haskin, who redshirted the indoor season due to a possible stress fracture, will not participate this weekend, Capriotti said.

The K-State rowing team will be competing in St. Louis this weekend at the Washington University Regatta.

The team is coming off a third-place finish at the University of Texas Regatta during spring break. All three varsity boats men's open, men's lightweight and women's open — took second-place finishes.

The K-State men's rugby team will traveling to Kansas City, Mo., to take on the Kansas City Blues Saturday. The Blues, one of the top club teams in the nation, steamrolled the K-State ruggers last fall.

The K-State team currently stands at 2-1. The match is slated for a 1:30 p.m. start.

HONOLULU (AP) - Mike Jones scored twice as Wichita State edged Sacramento State 3-2 Thursday in the seventh day of the Rainbow Easter Tournament.

Wichita State (21-7 and 5-1 in the tournament) advanced into championship play Friday. Sacramento State (21-12 and 2-4) moved into the consolation bracket.

The Shockers went ahead 3-1 in the sixth when Jones came home on Jose Ramos' sacrifice fly to right.

Wichita State had taken a 2-0 lead in the fourth when Todd

Dreifort's single scored Jones. The Homets made it 2-1 in the next inning when Shawn Blankenship hit a single to center, driving in Dave Kushan ninth on Gaylon Johnson's RBI.

Wichita State starter Darrin Paxton picked up his fourth victory against one loss. It was Sacramento State starter Dave Paulk's first loss after five wins.

Pitching staff key to 'Cats' hopes

Sports Reporter

The tens digit on the Frank Myers Field scoreboard works quite well this season. K-State's offense has proven that 10 times to date and added a 14-run outburst at Southwest Missouri State.

The numbers are startling. Team batting average: .332. Home runs: 32 in 29 games (two more and the Wildcats will match last year's season

A catcher has an 11-game hitting streak. One regular already has a career-best RBI total, and the 'Cats haven't crossed the midway point of the season yet.

Such noise from the 'Cats' bats is a good thing. That's because it's looking like K-State's pitching staff won't slow many teams down.

Without question, things started out great for 'Cat hurlers this year six shutouts and two no-hitters in the first 18 games. In three wins over nationally ranked teams, the 'Cats yielded just two runs.

But after Kansas came to town last weekend and split four games, K-State showed it may have to adopt a style of winning that would make Loyola-Marymount's basketball team proud.

The Jayhawks beat K-State's staff like a drum, scoring 40 runs in the final three games of the series. If senior Kent Hipp hadn't worked his way out of repeated jams in the opener last Friday, the damage could have been a lot worse.

It took awful pitching by KU to give the 'Cats a win in the third game and allow them to come away with a 2-2 Big Eight Conference mark heading into tonight's game at Oklahoma.

Kansas right fielder Denard Stewart, who delivered the go-ahead hit in the 'Hawks' 11-3 win on Saturday, said KU hitters were licking their chops in the late innings.

'We knew if we could get into their bullpen, they were finished," Stewart said. "We had them right where we wanted them.' In both of K-State's losses, the

Jayhawks had 'Cat relievers by the throat. Kansas scored 18 of its 42 against Kansas. runs in the seventh, eighth and ninth innings of the weekend series.

"That's the problem a lot of teams in the conference are having," Kansas coach Dave Bingham said. "Pitching depth is a real concern for everyone.

In K-State's case, the leak begins in the starting rotation. Hipp emerged as the staff ace, Sean Pedersen has been a solid No. 2 man. and Tim Churchman worked his way into the third spot.

But after that ..

"We're still searching for a fourth starter," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "We just don't have one, and nobody has stepped forward and performed well in that spot.'

Chris Hmielewski tried. The junior southpaw showed a flash of brilliance with a no-hitter against Augustana earlier this season, but the Jayhawks chased him in the third inning of the series finale.

When starters get knocked out early, the heat falls on an already thin bullpen. Knuckleballer Dave Christensen, who has decisions in 7-of-8 appearances this year, ran out of gas after pitching back-to-back days

A possible third win in the series was destroyed Sunday when Christensen threw a two-strike fastball to KU's Jeff Neimeier. The Jayhawk first baseman smashed a grand slam over the left field fence to negate a 'Cat comeback. The home run was set up when Christensen walked the Jayhawks' bottom two hitters to start the inning.

"We just can't make mistakes like that," Clark said. "You aren't going to win when you're not throwing strikes."

K-State's bullpen will be aided when junior Greg McNamara can return from an arm injury. Sophomore Brett Bock stepped forward with four scoreless innings of relief in a 15-12 win over Kansas Saturday.

The 'Cats don't need a staff of Nolan Ryans and Dave Stewarts to be successful. Even perennial power Oklahoma State is struggling with a team ERA of 6.05. But if K-State is going to spend another mid-May weekend in Oklahoma City at the Big Eight Tournament, a few more pitchers are going to have to stop the bleeding.

Baseball team prepares to face improved Sooners

BILL LANG

Sports Reporter

It's been said before, and it definitely applies to the University of Oklahoma Sooners baseball team, according to K-State coach Mike Clark. What a difference a year

After 26 games last year, the Sooners were 17-9. They have improved by three games in each column to 20-6 this season. The reason for the improvement: the little things. 'Right now, Oklahoma is a very good team," Clark said. "I've talked to scouts and seen them on television, and they're doing a lot of the little things extremely well. They're moving the runners over, getting good at bats and good fielding and quality pitching.

"This is a different team from last year," Clark added. "Last year, they had a lot of talent, but they just didn't play together. This year, they have the talent and the experience of playing together, and they are going to be awfully tough to beat. Right now, they are a total package and have a good shot at being a legitimate Top 20 team.' Oklahoma's success can also be attributed to new skipper Larry Cochell. Cochell comes to OU with a career coaching record of 796-458-2. He's coached at such powers as Emporia State University, Oral Roberts and Cal State Fullerton. He also has three appearances in the College World Series, one with Oral Roberts and two with Fullerton.

K-State, however, comes into the series well-rested, not having played since March 24, winding up their conference-opening split with Kansas. They also have the confidence factor, having swept the Sooners in four games last season at Frank Myers Field.

The Sooners are coming off a 5-2 win over the Homed Frogs of Texas Christian University Wednesday

"I got together with a few of the players and talked about the upcoming game," Clark said. "I reminded them that we'll be facing a much tougher pitching staff than Kansas'.

"We also realize they are going to have a better bullpen, a better closer and a better team ERA. It all comes down to their pitching coach Vern Ruhle, who is one of the better ones in the country."

Baseball fans with long-term memories might remember Ruhle as the pitcher for the Houston Astros in the late 1980s. He also pitched for the Detroit Tigers, Cleveland Indians and the California Angels.

The Sooners' leading pitcher is Matt Ruebel, Ruebel currently sports a 5-1 record with 45 strikeouts in 35.1 innings of work. K-State might want to wear some padding, since he has also beaned eight batters this

The OU staff, however, will have I'd have to say I like our team," he its hands full as the 'Cats are currently batting .332 as a team with 32 homers, 39 doubles, 21 triples and have scored 252 runs. Clark said this series will be one of the tougher ones K-State will have this season. It could well be a series in which the winner has an upper hand in the conference standings. "Last year they finished seventh, but this year they have a good shot at finishing in the upper division, and we're going to have to play our best ball of the season," Clark said. Clark also said his team has a legitimate shot at finishing in the upper division of the conference if the pitching is there. 'Right now, position player-wise, our fourth-grade girls talk, giggle and wait to do what they love most — jump rope — not at all nervous about performing in front of more than 200 people.

The Manhattan girls are members of Lee School's jump-roping club, the Lee Swingers.

It's Robyn Oliver's first year as a Swinger, and she's excited about the performance.

"It's fun," Oliver said. "It's also a group project."
Inside the school gym, students were waiting for the performance to start. Jerry Carpenter, Lee teacher, announced the group and explained this was the first performance for some members.

Music filled the hollow gym and one by one, each group or pair performed a routine lasting a minute or two.

Some tricks are performed flawlessly; others are missed. Whatever the case, the jumpers run out of the spotlight with a little smile on their young faces.

Double-under, frog-up and double-dutch are a few of the tricks the Swingers practice before and after school to prepare for the seven to 10 performances they do in one year.

The Lee Swingers are a group of about 60 jump ropers coached by Carpenter and Heidi Francis, who is also a teacher at Lee.

"Jump roping is good for a couple of reasons," Carpenter said. "The health and fitness part of it is good. Some of these jumpers are really good athletes." Performances the Lee Swingers present are done for various reasons.

For instance, when a physical education class is getting ready for a jump-rope unit, the group will do a demonstration presentation to get the other students excited about the unit. The presentation also helps to teach different moves and tricks.

The girls said other students in the schools like the performances and afterwards more students want to jump rope and learn tricks. Each group member has her

In addition to demonstration programs, the group performs for public entertainment.

This year, a group of 12 jumpers traveled to Colby to perform at Colby High School's basketball tournament—the Black and Orange Classic.

"The gym was packed and the girls didn't miss a thing," Carpenter said. "Three thousand people gave the group a standing ovation. It was super."

Confidence is something jump roping can give these much more confident of themselves," Carpenter said.

The members of the group also learn self-discipline.

During after-school practices as many as 60 jumpers may practice in the school gym. To be productive, each student has to work independently on tricks and moves.

"It usually doesn't get too out-of-control during practices," said Francis, who coaches the after-school practices.

Members of the group compose their own routines for programs, Carpenter said. Many times they ask the coaches for advice.

A single routine can be composed for a group of two to seven jumpers. The routines usually reflect the members' strongest moves.

Before members of the club can perform in a program, they must be able to do 15 basic skills 10 times without missing, Carpenter said.

Grant to support new teacher training program

Elementary science and math integration focus of project same pace and continue that way vorably in the future for throughout the five-year program.

CANDY McNICKLE Collegian Reporter

Using a $1.67 million five-year grant from the National Science Foundation, the College of Education, College of Arts and Sciences and Manhattan/Ogden Public School District have begun designing a new teacher training program.

The grant will aid in the development of a new model for preparing elementary teachers for enhanced science, mathematics and technology teaching and will prepare preservice teachers for their classroom

"Currently, students are being recruited to take part in the program," said Emmett Wright, associate dean of the College of Education. "We want students who are at sophomore level or only have 30 to 40 credit hours of non-education classes."

Three elementary schools, Lee, Woodrow Wilson and Amanda Arnold, will be directly involved with the project. Twenty-five teachers from these schools will be trained master teachers who work on the planning team and help in making field experience decisions. Participating students will be placed in these teachers' structors, who will spend half of their time with the University and half with the school district. They will conduct K-State classroom organization, field experiences and will each be in charge of 10 of the participating

"One of the most exciting aspects of this is working with the Manhattan teachers," said Gail Shroyer, instructor of secondary education. "They have come up with new and rewarding ideas and share much enthusiasm.'

Participation in the program isn't limited to just education majors, it's open to everyone. Wright said they want the students to start out at the

'Many benefits will come to those students involved with this project," Wright said. "Students will be more specialized in their area of concentration and will also be looked upon faemployment."

Shroyer said although the program is still in the preliminary stages, the main concern is to concentrate on science and math integration within the elementary classroom. This will be aided with additional input from the University's math department and all of its science departments.

Three new courses are being developed in order to put more emphasis on active learning and concentration on problem-solving and highlevel thinking skills," said Willard Parker, associate professor of mathematics. "These classes could lead to a change in elementary curriculum."

Wright said there are few minority teachers, and they are hoping to reach more through this program. Various scholarships will be available to candidates, including use of the grant money and help from the University.

'There is much money involved with this program," Wright said. "In addition to the grant money, the University will be contributing money as well as the Manhattan/Ogden School District, so a total of about $3 million will be used. Additional costs such as computers, transportation and entrance scholarships will be shared."

Dean Zollman, physics professor, said the science department's primary reason for its involvement is to try to provide better background for better prepared elementary teachers and also to teach how to work with science and math together.

Student explores ways to remove fat in ice cream

ULRIKE DAUER

Collegian Reporter In the near future, ice cream lovers may be able to leave their calorie calculators at home. LeAnn Bowles, graduate student in foods and nutrition, is exploring how to replace the fat in ice cream with other non-fat ingredients having a lower energy Bowles presented her study at the Graduate Seminar in Foods and Nutrition Wednesday in Justin Hall.

Bowles, in her master's thesis, uses modified potato starch and hydrocolloids (gel forming substances), like carrageenan and locust bean gum, to replace the milkfat of ice cream.

The fat of milk, which is used in ice cream, contains nine kilocalories per gram. One gram of starch yields only four kilocalories.

Bowles said she wants to test how the texture and foam structure of ice cream changes with the introduction of starch and hydrocolloids

She said with a step-by-step replacement of the milk fat by potato starch and hydrocolloids in increments up to 100 percent, she hopes to find the best combination level. Bowles said ice cream sales decreased by 4 percent between 1988 and 1989.

She said ice cream manufacturers are also interested in developing low-fat ice cream to answer the increased awareness of health risks due to high-fat diets.

At the seminar, Delores Heisserer, also a graduate student in foods and nutrition, presented the master's thesis idea she is pursuing on cheese flavor.

She said in the last five years, U.S. citizens have increased cheese consumption.

"Today, one-fifth of the milk U.S. cows produce goes toward cheese production," she said.

Heisserer said cheese flavor is a complex individual perception produced by aldehydes, ketones and esters, chemical compounds which occur during the ripening process of cheese due to chemical breakdown reactions.

She said no one has ever successfully developed a reproducible method to assess cheese flavor and explain consumer preferences.

Heisserer said in her study she does not only want to determine cheese flavor attributes and define each attribute, but also wants to establish chemical references for each attribute to make it reproducible.

Diluted caffeine could be such a chemical reference for the extent of bitterness, she said.

She said she further wants to compare popular and unpopular cheeses and find similar flavor patterns which would explain why people prefer or reject a certain type of cheese.

According to a 1989 population survey, there are 16 million displaced homemakers and 6 million single parents in the United States.

As the numbers increase, so does the need for programs to assist them. New Directions is a human service and adult education program for single parents and homemakers. The program has been at K-State for 10 years. Shirley Marshall, program director, said originally New Directions addressed the needs of rural woman, but as times have changed, the services provided now are focused on a variety of needs.

Marshall took over as program director in July to reorganize the program. She first determined the community's needs and what other services and programs were available to start networking, Marshall said.

The program comes from the approach of having three functional components: Information and Referral, Guidance and Supportive Services, and Training Workshops.

Sheryl DeMond, a New Directions volunteer, presents monthly personal development workshops. DeMond said she became interested in New Directions because it is such a worthwhile program to get into and to contribute to the community.

The Clovia 4-H House volunteers babysitting services for New Directions workshops and special events, which Marshall said is a blessing.

Marshall said many clients need to take a more aggressive approach when looking for a job in a competitive job market like Manhattan.

The program provides help with writing resumes, and mock interviews are done to help the client before diving into the job search.

Marshall said she takes pride in the successful cases, and this type of work is part of her personality.

More than 600 guests are expected to come to Indica 1991 at Manhattan High School Saturday to enjoy an evening of Indian food, Indian cul-

About 120 people helped prepare the fair, which for the first time is in the spring, said Arunan, graduate student in chemistry.

Indica features Indian food, culture Professor reviews economic growth

ALISA DIETZ Collegian Reporter

Kansas investment strategies and their affect on rural economic development were the topics for this month's Kansas Center for Rural Initiative.

Anthony Redwood, professor of business at the University of Kansas since 1972, addressed four issues at noon Thursday at Harry's Uptown at the monthly meeting for KCRI.

Redwood first addressed a strategy to economically develop Kansas. He said community development is a must to Kansas.

He said it's essential to community development to support and buy products from your community.

Kansas also has global competition because of its location so far from the major markets, he said.

This causes the state to have a somewhat weak self-esteem, a lack of capital, low cost of production, inadequate funding and a lot of conservatism in the state.

The second issue Redwood addressed was where Kansas is financially.

Redwood said Kansas is low on state funds - Kansas faces the challenge of having to put more money into economic development.

Human capital is a problem when at least 45 other countries can hire cheaper labor to do the same thing people in the United States do for higher wages, Redwood said. Kansas is 20 percent a manufacturing state. Therefore, we must produce the quality of foreign products, because that is what the public wants," Redwood said. Redwood also said there is a tremendous need for institutional compatibility.

"We need to get communities together," he said. "From here, Kansas needs to move on the demand

Engineers coordinate conference

Members of the Engineering Student Council will be coordinating the annual regional conference next Members were attending the reg-will coordinate the event, said Brent Bestwick, graduate student in industrial engineering, who will co-chair the conference committee with Amy Ewert, sophomore in architectural engineering.

K-State was asked by council members from the University of Texas in Austin and Texas A&M to organize the event. Both Texas schools have served as hosts to the conference in Dallas the past two

"K-State is the most active region after the University of Texas in Austin and Texas A&M," Bestwick said.

"I felt it was a good idea to host it and we are anxious to do it," said John Dollar, assistant dean of engineering and co-adviser to the

The conference's purpose is to keep people and the region members updated and to keep the schools and students in good standing with the corporations, Bestwick said.

It is because of the corporate sponsors in Dallas, Exxon and Texaco, among others, that K-State decided to keep the conference in Dallas rather than move it to Manhattan or Kansas City next year, he said.

'Dallas has tons of firms," Bestwick said, "and it is good recognition for K-State in that area." "It would be nice to have here, but there is an awful lot of financial support from industries there," Dollar Coordinating the conference can be expensive, unless the council can get the Dallas corporations to help sponsor it, he said. Bestwick said it cost Texas A&M

$20,000 to organize and present this year's conference, but with corporate sponsorship, only $2,000 actually came out of the university's pocket. "Corporations picked up the rest of the tab," he said. So by continuing to have the conference in Dallas, Bestwick said the groundwork is already laid for corporate sponsorship.

The next step is to locate a good keynote speaker for the conference, Bestwick said. The council will also be in charge of coordinating the seminars and en-

Two Soviet professors are visiting K-State as part of a scientist exchange between the K-State Grain Science Department and the All-Union Research Institute for Grain and Processed Grain Products in Moscow.

Alexander Talalaev and Tatiana Kamneva, researchers of the All-Union Institute, arrived March 21 to study wheat quality factors during their 40-day study in Manhattan.

A K-State senior in milling science and management, Alan Morss, will visit Moscow in April as part of the exchange program.

"The agreement is mainly to determine wheat millability and classification of wheat in both countries," said Elieser Posner, associate profes-

The millability factor of wheat is especially important to millers, who are the last ones to use wheat in its

"It's not a simple venture," Posner said. The exchange agreement is under a 5-year plan to establish similiar wheat quality grading systems.

"It's the first time ever there has been an exchange of scientists who are working for the same objectives in both countries," he said.

During the interview, Kamneva spoke little English, while Talalaev only spoke German and Russian. Kamneva said she wished she had a larger English vocabulary.

'Dr. Posner, he helped," Kamaeva said. "Some students said we speak a secret language."

Kamneva said she translates for Talalaev and with Posner's ability to speak English and German, they will know four languages by the end of the visit.

They will write a paper about the experience and translate the report in English for K-State's records.

When asked what their first reactions were, she said, "You don't have enough paper to describe it all.'

"At first, we were shocked about the larger size of this University. Very large. There are beautiful places, and it is very clean here," she

They were impressed with students' participation in sports and the number of places where students could play sports.

"Yesterday, we went to our first meeting and saw Posner with his students," she said. "We like how the teachers speak to the students. Seems like the students are interested in their work and like his work."

They said K-State students seem to work very hard. To attend school at the Institute, applicants need to pass at least two tests. Usually, students must pass five separate tests to receive government money, which most students need to afford school.

"It's very, very difficult," she said. Part of the mission of the exchange is to just work and talk to each other,

"It's not our purpose to do just one thing," she said.

Although they have had little free time, they have toured Manhattan and visited a professor's home.

"He had a very beautiful daughter who spoke Russian," she said. "Americans have been very friendly in meeting us, and everything seems

They were not prepared for the warm temperatures and had packed heavy coats and wool garments.

The U.S. Wheat Associates in Washington, D.C., and Kansas Wheat Commission in Manhattan are funding the exchange.

Yeltsin followers march against Soviet president

By the Associated Press

MOSCOW - Tens of thousands of supporters of Boris Yeltsin marched in the streets in defiance of Mikhail Gorbachev Thursday.

Marchers stopped short of clashing with the thousands of riot police and troops he ordered to stand in their

The march was organized to support Yeltsin, the reformist president of the Russian republic. But after Gorbachev banned the rally, it became a demonstration in support of recent limited moves toward democracy.

Earlier in the day inside the Kremlin, Yeltsin's supporters in the Russian parliament appeared to gain the upper hand over hard-line Communists seeking his ouster.

Yeltsin has been pressing Gorbachev for more reforms, including a faster move to a free-market system that many Soviets believe would ease their economic woes. The two have also clashed over Yeltsin's insistence that Soviet republics control their own economies and natural resources.

Troops prevented the protesters from marching to Manezh Square next to the Kremlin. Demonstrators settled for a huge rally on Tverskaya Street about a mile west of the heart of Soviet power.

"You should should not try to hurt us. We have no weapons," an elderly woman pleaded with a helmeted line of riot police.

"I'm not afraid. We should march forward, regardless. I've come to demonstrate here tonight because I cannot go on living like this any more," said Natasha, a 32-year-old engineer who refused to give her last name.

The 50,000 police and soldiers deployed in the Soviet capital to enforce Gorbachev's ban on rallies nearly rivaled the number of protesters, but there were no reports of clashes or injuries. Police said they made no arrests. The police and troops were armed with water cannons, tear gas and truncheons.

At times, the crowd surged against the human wall of troops, but it stood firm while protest organizers pleaded through bullhorns for people to back

People leaned out windows and stood on phone booths, trucks and kiosks. Tens of thousands of demonstrators lined the closed-off streets in the center of the capital. Police estimated the crowd at 100,000; organizers claimed 500,000. Because the crowd spilled onto side streets, it was impossible to make a more comprehensive estimate.

In late afternoon, before the scheduled rally, about 500 people broke through light metal barriers onto Manezh Square. But after 45 minutes, police and soldiers gently moved them from the area. Warned to avoid confrontation and violence, the demonstrators complied.

The protest came at the end of a tense day in Moscow, with lastminute appeals to Gorbachev to call off the troops to prevent any bloodshed. The official news agency Tass reported hospitals on alert to treat casualties. Armored personnel carriers were sighted at a base three miles from the Kremlin.

As hundreds of military trucks and thousands of troops poured into the streets around the Kremlin, the Russian parliament, meeting inside, declared Gorbachev's ban on demonstrations unconstitutional.

Yeltsin's political supporters apparently beat back an attempt by hard-line Communists and Gorbachev allies to oust him at the opening session of the People's Deputies meeting in the Grand Kremlin

In a debate over the session's agenda, Communists never even suggested the vote of no-confidence in Yeltsin, which had been their reason for demanding the special session. At an afternoon Communist Party news conference, speakers denied they ever planned such a thing.

The 60-year-old Yeltsin told reporters Thursday's session had turned out ideal.

The pivotal point was Yeltsin's early victory, by a resounding 532-286 margin, denouncing as unconstitutional Gorbachev's decisions to ban demonstrations in the capital for three weeks.

Powwow features dance contests

Collegian Reporter Dance contests, arts and crafts and prize drawings will be a few of the festivities going on at the second annual powwow for Native American Indians.

The traditional celebration will be from 6 to 10 p.m. Saturday at Cico Park and is free to the public. A dinner of ethnic food will be open to the public.

There will be dancers from all areas of the state of Kansas. The All Indian Club from Wichita will be performing along with dancers from Holton, Horton, Mayetta, Oskaloosa and Haskell Indian Junior College.

Cheryl May, co-chairman of the powwow, said the Inter-tribal Warrior Society from Wichita will lead the traditional flag dance to a teepee at Pottorf Hall.

"The dancers in the contests will range from all age groups to all types of dances, such as the Fancy dance where a lot of feathers are worn by the dancers," May said.

There will be small prizes awarded to the winners.

Thurman Williams, who is onefourth Cherokee Indian and president of American Indian Science and Engineering Society, is the student co-chairman. He said there will be seven booths of arts and crafts and drawings to win a basket donated from each vender.

Henry Collins, who makes Indian drums, will be bringing drummers and singers from Lawrence. He will also demonstrate drummaking at noon today in the K-State Union 212.

Bruce Arvizu will be the pow-wow's master of ceremonies. He is one-half Apache Indian and a member of the Native American Student

"I got involved in the club when I checked Native American on my enrollment form, and I started getting calls from the club," Arvizu

He said he helped out with last year's powwow and is on this year's planning committee. He will be speaking to the audience and announcing the dance contests throughout the evening.

"Most students just look at the total on their fee receipt and just pay it, and a dollar is usually not that big of a deal," Nelson said.

Joel Gruenke, graduate senator, questioned the intended use of the Recreational Services' use of the fee increase. "It's $32,000 a year for new equipment. We're going to have to buy new equipment anyway. Do we have to have it all at once? They didn't think so until they got pressed for it. They couldn't come up with a list for what they needed to buy," Gruenke said.

Gruenke said with the $2 increase, Rec Services will get a 33 percent increase and services can continue at the current rate or can get better.

Senate-funded groups are scheduled to be reviewed every three years for a possible fee increase. Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt said there was a little confusion concerning that issue.

"It is a review, not a guarantee of an increase," he said.

Recreational Services was the only group scheduled to be reviewed this year.

"It was much more successful than we anticipated," May said. "There was an excellent response from the Manhattan community and K-State community. For being only our second powwow, we were very proud of how it went."

Thirty-five to 40 dancers entertained throughout the evening, performing such dances as a flag dance and a round dance. Some of the dancers traveled from as far as Canada to join in the festivities.

An unusual event occurred early in the powwow when during a flag song, an eagle feather fell off Cliff Cayon's outfit.

According to Indian tradition, the ceremony must stop, and only an elder can pick up the feather. The person who dropped the feather must then make an offering to the club and to the drum.

SGA funding bill rejected, Union passed

ERWIN SEBA Staff Reporter

Student senators rejected a new fee to finance the Student Governing Association at about 7:20 a.m. Friday following three hours of bitter Earlier in the morning, Senate passed increases on line-item fees for the K-State Union.

Coming at the end of a long night of debate and discussion over fee proposals for Recreational Services, Student Publications Inc. and the Union, the SGA fee debate saw accusations of laziness and deception traded between the SGA leadership and senators.

Further pressure was placed on the senators because of a Kansas Board of Regents deadline requiring all fee increases for the next academic year be delivered to the regents office in Topeka by 10 a.m. Friday

The SGA proposal would have increased the student activity fee by $1.95 for full-time students and 17 cents for part-time students. That would have financed a $1.80 fee for each student at K-State to fund the SGA budget.

Part of the new money was to be used to hire a full-time receptionist, give raises to the SGA leadership, and to refurbish the Student Governing Services office in the Union.

As debate on the fee opened, several senators asked why it needed to be dealt with this year. The fee would have changed SGA's funding method.

'We should table it, and maybe give it a chance in the future," said Enginering Sen. Camille Rohleder. Sean Cash, arts and sciences senaproposal.
"Who didn't do their homework?"

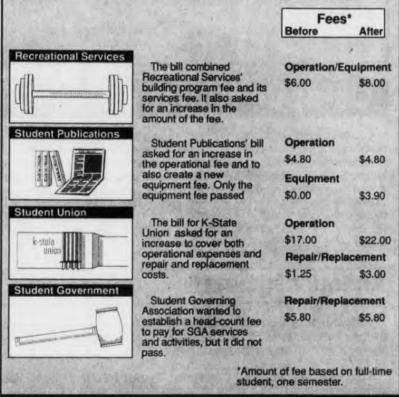

Cash said. "Who didn't do their research? I don't think we should table it. I don't think we should fail it. I think we should back up and do our jobs. It takes a bigger person to resign than not do your job."

Heather Smith, arts and sciences senator, said the SGA fee had been kept under wraps by the SGA

"I also find it personally insulting

Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt also criticized senators for claiming ignorance of a bill's contents because they did not do their research.

The spirit of the Old West filled Weber Arena this weekend. More than 200 cowboys and cowgirls from the Midwest competed in the 35th Annual K-State Rodeo.

The K-State Rodeo is one of 10 rodeos held each season in the Central Plains Region of the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association. Contestants from Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri earn points at these rodeos to qualify for the College National Rodeo Finals, in Bozeman, Montana. Merle Flinn, coach of the K-State Rodeo team, said he was satisfied with the attendance at the rodeo.

'The crowds were average for Easter weekend, normally they would have been about 20 percent larger," Flinn said.

Attending the K-State Rodeo were contestants from South West Oklahoma State University, Panhandle State University, Murray State University, Western Oklahoma State University, South East Oklahoma State University, North Eastern Oklahoma A&M, Oklahoma State University, Rogers State, Garden City Community College, Fort Scott Community College, Fort Hays State University, Colby Community College, North West Missouri and K-

Several members of the K-State Rodeo team qualified for the Sunday performance, which is determined by their placings in the Friday and Saturday performances.

Tammi Larson-Myer competed in the break-away roping and the goat tying event, Mark Scales in steer wrestling, and Steve Cutshaw and Jay Todd in team roping. Flinn said he was pleased with the team's performance.

'We had a real successful weekend. The weather was nice, and all the kids competed real well," Flinn said.

In addition to the rodeo events, contestants also took time out for a little fun.

The Blue River Pub was the site for the rodeo dance Friday and Saturday evenings. John Reh, Rodeo Club member, said admission into the dance was a large money maker for the club.

'The pub was packed Saturday night - the gate admission will really help in financing the rodeo," Reh

Winners in the events are as follows:

Bareback Riding — Tommy Thompson, Panhandle State; Calf Roping - Michael Mullen, South Western Oklahoma; Break-Away Roping — Shannon Vitt, Fort Scott Community College; and Saddle Bronc — Cory Hughes, Panhandle

Steer Wrestling — Scot Quick, South Western Oklahoma; Goat Tying - Shelley Johnston, Garden City Community College; Team Roping Britt Bockius, Rogers State and Ken Bailey, South East Oklahoma; Barrel Racing - Kim Stamps, South Western Oklahoma; and Bull Riding - Steve Epperson, Fort Scott Community College.

Sleep: too much, not enough

MARLA ROCKHOLD

Collegian Reporter

Feeling fatigued, grouchy or depressed? Do you have difficulty concentrating, handling stress or thinking coherently? If so, it may be the result of getting too much or not enough sleep, said Frances Spickerman, psychology intern at K-State. The amount of sleep needed may be different for each person, she said, but to remain healthy, the normal person needs roughly six to 10 hours.

"There are exceptions," she said. "Some people claim to require only four to five hours." Spickerman said sleeping is important.

"The body seems to need some recooperation time to replenish itself," she said. "If a person does not get enough sleep, it (the body) doesn't have this time.' Some people may think naps may be the answer to make up for lack of sleep, Spickerman said, but this is not necessarily "If a nap is used to make up for sleep not done a night, it is not good because they get into a cycle," she said. "It is best to do all sleeping at once for adults." But on the other hand, if students are getting too much sleep, they could get into a cycle or routine and sleep more than they are awake. She said some people have been known to sleep 14 hours or more.

Depression may cause excessive sleep, and excessive sleep may cause depression, Spickerman said.

"It's simple," Spickerman said. "Your body is going to awaken when it is ready.'

Hijackers take over Algerian jet

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Hijackers took over an Air Algeria jet at Algiers' international airport Sunday, apparently holding passengers on board hostage, airport sources said.

It was not known how many passengers were on board. The plane was parked on the tarmac of Houari Boumedienne Airport after arriving from Bechar in southwest A. eria, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

It was not clear what type of plane was involved, or if it was commandeered before it landed in the Algerian capital. But the sources said it appeared there was more than one hijacker.

Cuban radio broadcasts Easter service

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Cuban radio broadcast an Easter service for the first time since Fidel Castro's Communist forces took power 30 years ago, apparently easing the official policy of atheism.

It was only the second time a religious service was broadcast on state-run radio, the official Prensa Latina news agency said in a dispatch monitored in Mexico City. The first was last Christmas.

The broadcasts signal a thaw in church-state relations after decades of official atheism. Communist Party leaders are also considering letting worshipers of various faiths into the party.

Greater tolerance of religion began last year when Castro met with members of the Cuban Ecumenical Council and promised an end to discrimination against believers.

The council includes Cuba's Protestant denominations, but not the Roman Catholic Church, the nation's largest. Like the Christmas broadcast, the Easter service was held under the aegis of the council, and Roman Catholics did not take part.

TIRANA, Albania (AP) — Excited Albanians crowded polling stations Sunday for historic multiparty elections called after protests and desperate refugees helped force an end to 46 years of hard-line Stalinism and isolation.

The parliamentary vote, held less than four months after opposition parties were legalized, was described by Western observers as free but tainted by continued Communist domination over the media and government.

Some opposition leaders, however, charged President Ramiz Alia's ruling Communists with fraud and threatened to reject the outcome if the problems are widespread.

The official ATA news agency said 95 percent of the 1.9 million eligible voters turned out. There were no reports of election-related violence. Polls closed at 8 p.m. — noon CST.

TOPEKA (AP) — Some state officials and legislators are afraid Kansas could become the nation's landfill.

Trash from elsewhere could end up in Kansas and under existing regulations, there isn't much that could be done about it. Garbage is considered a commodity under federal interstate commerce laws.

That means trash from other states could be trucked to Kansas the way retail goods are shipped from state to state.

Riley County Police officers discovered the body of a 23-yearold Manhattan man Friday afternoon in his home at 909 Kearney

The cause of death was described as a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the head.

Summoned to the home by a real estate agent examining the rental property, the RCPD identified the man as Todd D. Burr, a taxi driver. He was declared dead at the scene by Assistant Riley County Coroner John Bambara.

An RCPD news release said Burr was described by family members as being depressed recently.

Wamego 16-year-old killed in wreck

MANHATTAN (AP) — A 16-year-old boy was killed Friday night when the pickup truck he was driving went out of control and overturned, ejecting him and a passenger.

Kevin A. Dekat of Wamego was pronounced dead at a Manhattan hospital about 90 minutes after the 8 p.m. accident, the Kansas Highway Patrol said.

Dekat was driving the pickup westbound on Kansas 18 near Zeandale when it ran into a ditch, came back on the road, went out of control and rolled over, the patrol said.

Car chase reaches speed of 120 mph

Pursuit ends with wreck in City Park

ERWIN SEBA Staff Reporter

An early Saturday morning car chase of three men in a 1983 Ford Mustang by area police ended in Manhattan City Park when the Mustang struck a tree and flipped over.

The chase, which reached speeds of 120 mph, started at Fort Riley when Military Police officers pursued the Mustang to Ogden. From the fort, the chase proceeded east on highway 18 and then south to the Hunter's Island area.

Near the intersection of Richards Drive and Fort Riley Boulevard, the Mustang, driven by Joseph McCartney of Junction City, almost struck a Kansas Highway Patrol car driven by Trooper Lee Booher.

Booher joined Military Police and Riley County Police officers in the chase.

During the chase, there appeared to be several attempts to ram law enforcement vehicles, Sgt. Larry Freeby, traffic patrol supervisor with the RCPD, said Sunday.

The pursuit then went from Hunter's Island north on South Manhattan Avenue.

The Mustang drove into the park as it crossed Poyntz Avenue, where South Manhattan Avenue ends.

The Mustang drove about 150 to 200 feet into the park where it struck McCartney and the two passengers, Samuel Campbell and Christopher Smith, both of Junction City, were taken to Memorial Hospital and released after treatment.

A spokeswoman for Memorial Hospital declined to provide information about the condition of the three men, citing patients' right to Mark Meseke, public affairs spokesman for Fort Riley, said Military Police officers first saw the Mustang parked behind Ware Elementary School in the Custer Hill area at the fort.

As they approached the vehicle it took off at high speeds and two Military Police vehicles chased it to the Ogden gate at the fort. Along the way, the Mustang drove through several yards, Meseke said.

McCartney was cited by the RCPD for fleeing and eluding law enforcement officers and reckless driving, Freeby said.

Riley County Patrolman Ron McDaniel and Kansas Highway Patrolman Lee Booher read a car's serial number after it wrecked in City Park early Saturday. Police chased the car from Fort Riley. The driver and two passengers were treated and released from Memorial Hospital.

Restrictions limit research

Generalizations made about marijuana smoke

ANNE TATUM

Collegian Reporter

Restrictions on marijuana research make it difficult for comparisons to be made between tobacco and marijuana smoke.

John Uhlarik, professor of psychology, said many generalizations have been made about marijuana smoke and its numerous adverse effects, but no real links have been

"Lots of suggestions have been made, just not links, that marijuana has multiple adverse effects.'

Uhlarik, who teaches a drugs and behavior course, said tobacco has been proven to cause lung cancer, makes this hard to prove.

emphysema, heart disease and strokes. He said marijuana smoke may cause lower testosterone levels in males, have negative effects on ovulation in females and destroy the immune system.

However, marijuana may have some positive aspects. Uhlarik said it releases the intraocular pressure inside the eye. This could be a breakthrough for glaucoma patients.

Webster's Dictionary defines glaucoma as a disease of the eye marked by high intraocular pressure, damaged optic disk, hardening of the eyeball and partial or total vision

Uhlarik said limited research

According to the book, "A Primer of Drug Action" by Dr. Robert Julien, differences in tobacco and marijuana smoke start with the chemical makeup of the two.

The most documented difference is the fact that marijuana contains a component called trahydrocannabinol, or THC, that is not found in tobacco. Nicotine is not in marijuana.

Marijuana increases the pulse rate and the blood pressure. Blood vessels of the comea also dilate, resulting in bloodshot eyes. Julien's book said, "THC users freuently report increased appetite, dry mouth, occasional dizziness, increased visual and auditory perception and some nausea.

"Taste, touch and smell may be enhanced, time perception altered and an increased sense of well-being, mild euphoria, relaxation and relief from anxiety are felt.'

Cigarettes have much less of an impact phsychologicaly and physiologically. A book by Harry Avis called, "Drugs and Life," said that in 1964 the first Surgeon General's report on smoking was released.

Nicotine, the primary active ingredient in tobacco, is highly toxic and has been widely used as an insecticide. It stimulates the release of norepinephrine, a hormone formed naturally in the body's sympathetic nerve endings.

"Comparisons are hard to make," Uhlarik said. "Ninety-nine percent of marijuana users don't smoke 20-30 marijuana cigarettes a day.'

Kiwanis' letters mark city for years to come

WADE RAMSEY

Collegian Reporter

The huge white letters on Bluemont Hill, which once served as an aerial navigation aide in the late 1920s, now welcome travelers to Manhattan.

In the summer of 1927, 25 members of the Manhattan Kiwanis Club turned out in the pouring rain to begin constrution of the letters.

According to the Kiwanis Dinner Bell of Aug. 30, 1947, the club members brought shovels, picks and other tools to Bluemont Hill and worked all night on the letters.

First, stones were gathered from around the hill and laid out in a pattern to form the letters. Then, the letters were covered in lime whitewash. The total cost of the project was $128, paid for by the Kiwanis members.

The letters are each 30 feet high and 16 feet wide.

"Some of the letters have slid some, and we've had to pour more concrete to reinforce them. But, it has mainly just cost us time," said Bob Roby, president of the club.

The Kiwanis Club maintains the letters by mowing the grass and trimming the bushes around the them. The letters are also whitewashed regularly.

Lower back support key in human evolution

ate dinner at my grandparents' apartment yesterday. It was a standard Easter dinner including ham, three-bean salad, and a weird potato-based dish with corn flakes sprinkled

I reached across the table for the salt shaker, and when I settled back down into my straight-backed chair, I discovered what was wrong with my generation. No lower back

I realize it sounds like a commercial - no lower back support — but my back felt so good lined straight up against the back of the chair. I didn't even eat my dessert, I just sat and enjoyed the enormous sensation of comfort arising from strong support near the base of my spine

I thought of other chairs I've known. A few were nice; a blue fluffy chair at a doctor's office, a chic backless computer chair from Paris, in which one not so much sat as kneeled, a tall stool from my parent's kitchen, a plush brown wingback in the living room where keys, combs and people got lost for days. All of them were alluring and luxurious, some more than others, and they were full-body chairs with someplace to rest one's head, legs and shoulders.

chairs was fleeting. Within five minutes, I'd be crossing my legs or shifting my weight for some reason I never quite understood. This chair, though, was like an hour with the chiropractor in "Jacob's Ladder." The spine is the center of the body. This chair understood that. I didn't even have to move. It was like my spine was a bird that had found a perch for the first time. The rest of my body relaxed, half-hung its frame. I could have sat there forever, if I hadn't realized the importance of this discovery to other people like me.

Lower back support has been a moving force in the evolution of man. The history of the world revolves around lower back support. The lack of it in the 20th century is responsible for almost every social, economic, and political problem we face today. Why?

Science has recently discovered that many fluids in the human brain are supplied by a minor organ, which resides at the base of the spine. Only direct pressure to the lumbar region can release these precious fluids, without which man cannot think. In fact, without proper support, the head actually withers away. It is thought that lack of lower back support is responsible for baldness.

Anthropologists believe that man began to walk erect only after the invention of chairs. It couldn't last. The comfort I felt in those Many digs have found that the leaders of many tribes were also excellent carpenters. The succession of kings in several societies is not based on blood lines, but by who can build the best throne. From this practice arises the term "chairman," for the head of a company or meeting.

"To chair," means to be in charge. The best musicians in an orchestra are given the term, "First Chair." Of course, this is unfair, since whomever sits in the chair with the best lower back support will get more mental stimulation, therefore playing with more mental lubrication, perpetuating their position in the orchestra.

The word "chair" shares the same Latin root as the word "cathedral," which originally meant the Bishop's seat of power. Power is almost synonymous with chair in history. This is no accident. Man has sought better chairs throughout time. Many wars anyone in front of TVs and computer have been fought in the name of chair aquisition. Reportedly, the carpenters of Kuwait are excellent. Jesus was a carpenter, and just look at what he did.

Without good chairs, we are lost. Most of the people of my generation, those born roughly between the Kennedy Assassination and the Nixon Resignation, have grown up in weird, politically correct, limpy, whiny and raggy chairs. No wood, only fluff. One of my roomates has, in fact, never sat in a chair. He has spent his entire life in couches or on the floor in front of the TV.

Many present problems are the result of poor lower back support. Improper chair construction can be directly linked to silliness, Democrats, and poetry, not to mention the decline of morals, crack-smacking, violence and death, poor vision, gout and constricted arteries, too. Also communism, stand-up comedy and Al Sharpton. Dan Quayle is one of the more popular candidates for the Lumbar Institute's 1991 poster child. M.C. Hammer is his only real competition.

Something must be done, and my grandmother doesn't have many spare chairs.

Now pay attention. This proposal pertains to everyone who sits, particuarly the twentysomethingers, who probably sit more than monitors.

I propose everyone throw out their old chairs and replace them with simple, sensible chairs that don't get clever or too intricate. The basic rule should be that chairs are to be sat on, not in.

here should be four legs, placed at a proper distance to provide a solid base that doesn't shift around when one stretches. A chair ought to have a round or square surface where one's butt fits neatly, regardless of size. The back of the chair should not try to fit the contours of a person's spine anymore than the seabottom should go out of its way to conform with the sea. A spine is like a snake; it can handle rugged landscapes. The back of a chair should aim at the ceiling, but taper a little bit behind the legs. This kind of chair should be adopted by schools, governments and families immediately.

And if you disagree, if you believe that lower back support is quaint folklore, if you feel that furniture ought to be as form-fitting as a leisure suit, fine. Go find a couch, you

Waiting period

Brady bill necessary

To qualify for a new credit card, you have to fill out an application and wait while the credit company verifies your references and finances.

Only reasonable, right? They don't allow just anyone to wander around with enough plastic to charge up an entire mall. They might default on payments or defraud someone else.

But what about a psycho loose with a handgun and enough bullets to kill everyone in the mall? Shouldn't there be some kind of check on prospective gun owners?

Only reasonable, right? Not so, says the National Rifle Association and other opponents of the Brady bill that would require a seven-day waiting period to purchase a handgun.

The Brady bill would give local police seven days to check the background of prospective buyers of handguns before the purchase is completed. But, the NRA and other opponents of the bill say that to impose a waiting period is to impose on their right to bear

Opponents of the Brady bill also argue that if a criminal desperately wants a gun right away, there are desperate measures by which he can acquire

Probably true, but just because a law is hard to enforce does not mean it should be abandoned. And no one wants to take away the right to bear arms, they just want to enforce the responsibility that comes with owning a handgun - the responsibility of not using that gun to violate anyone else's rights.

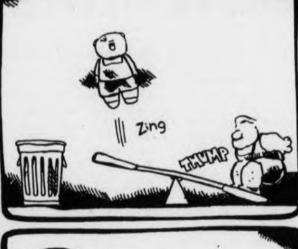

Why not try to make it a little harder for a criminal to purchase a handgun? Why not make prospective buyers fill out forms making the gun easier to trace? Why not require a seven-day wait to think about it?

It can't hurt, and it could save a life.

Vote tomorrow

Editor,

Rebecca Sack ....Eric Becker

I write simply to encourage the Manhattan community to take the opportunity to vote for Craig Raborn in the city commission election Tuesday. Raborn is a K-State student and a lifetime resident of Manhattan. He is young, and he has good ideas for Manhattan. Is it not time for some fresh, young thought and direction in our city leadership?

So many times I have seen young talent overlooked for supposedly more experienced leadership, only to find out that in the long run all the hoopla went nowhere. Young people are often labeled as having unrealistic and short-sighted objectives. I'm happy to announce that Raborn is one level-headed candidate for city commission.

One of Raborn's strong campaign issues is to see street lighting improved in the neighborhoods of Manhattan, especially near campus. This is an ever-growing concern at all major universities in this country and is of paramount importance in developing a healthy environment for our ever-growing city. Raborn will do whatever it takes to help provide the Manhattan community with a very safe and secure environment.

I remind you that you have three votes to place Tuesday, and I urge you to use one vote for Raborn.

Celebrate life

Well, once again Brad Seabourn has taken something, its purpose so clear, and managed to dissect it in such a way as to mock it according to his shallow dictates. I speak of Easter, what it represents and how the master of religious perversity has dictated that perhaps it should be called a second April Fool's

Granted, Easter arose out of a religious event whose all-important chronological order is unclear at best. But after all is said and done, does this really matter? I think not. Merely because Easter, as Seabourn has failed to see, is a celebration of life, our life and all life. It is a time of gathering, of sharing and a time of humanity. Yes, humanity; one concept Seabourn seems to have sacrificed in order to produce his wonderfully cold, logical argument against how people deem to reflect on a time of good.

Like Seabourn, I don't accept the existence of God. But I'm alive, inside and out. I feel emotions and have vitality, and I see Easter as a time to be thankful that I'm alive and that people care for me. This is the purpose of Easter, and if Seabourn can't see it, then perhaps April Fool's Day should be moved to his birthday.

After reading your article in the March 22 Collegian about the Magnetic Resonance Imaging mobile unit at Memorial Hospital, which has been open one day per week since last August, I felt that I must correct one major untruth in the article. It stated that, "If it wasn't for the mobile unit, area residents would have to travel to Topeka."

That statement is untrue, as Saint Mary Hospital has been providing this community with mobile MRI services since August 1988, open one day per week. In May of 1990, the service was increased to two days per week to better accomodate the people of this community.

Also, not pertaining to the article, but something I would like to reiterate is that Saint Mary Hospital is the only emergency room in Manhattan that has a physician on duty in the emergency room 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Thank you for allowing me the chance to clear up a misunderstanding.

God steps foward

Editor,

I wish to address all religious people. I speak especially to those who will write in to raise hell (sorry) about Brad Seabourn's

This is going to be shocking to many of you. Normally, I use Robert Tilton and the Tag Team Evangelists (as seen on "In Living Color") as my messengers, just as Satan uses Seaboum as his messenger.

Now, I feel the time has come for you to know the real truth: I am God.

To prove myself, is there anyone who can prove me wrong? No, I don't think so. Now that I've proven myself, there should be no non-believers. In this regard, please issue me a check in the amount of $500. If you pay this vow of faith, bless you. If you don't, then you'll go to hell, and there you'll burn. Please send your checks to me, God, at P.O. Box 666, Manhattan, Kan.

To be serious, I am in agreement (as always) with Seabourn. I fail to see how people can be so blind to the stupidity of religion, although I can respect that it is their decision. We only have one life. There are so many better things to do than sit in church. I believe people should learn to take the responsibility and the credit for their action's results. I sound like a preacher, so I had better stop.

DP-ED

Arts and Sciences Senator Kami White, uses Derek Thoman, also a senator in arts and sciences, as a middleman in delivering a note during a Senate debate Thursday.

Late night with Student Senate

Editor's note: The following is a firstperson account of a night's events at a Student Senate meeting.

DAVID FRESE

Staff Reporter Early last week I came into the newsroom with a hangover and a deadline, and someone called my "Dave," my editor bellowed rather smugly from her little blue office. "Have I got a story for you." Ed. note: I did not bellow. She wanted me to go to a Student Senate meeting and report on what goes on behind the headlines and get the human side. "It's got 'David Frese' written all over it," she pointed out. I almost got the dry heaves. I have done my best to stay away from student government. It scares me. I imagine a den of venomous snakes when I think of it. Someone could say, "Dave, someone just machine-gunned the entire Senate!" and I'd still try to push the story off on Seba.

But I faced my fear, and now my whole world just doesn't make sense anymore.

And the parts that didn't make sense before I went, such as government, bureaucracy and Robert's Rules of Order, have suddenly become perfectly sensible. That's pretty damned scary. I think I was lucky to escape with my sanity.

The meeting's agenda was a hefty and long one. Senate was considering four fee increases or implementations for Recreational Services, Student Publications Inc., K-State Union and Student Governing Association. The meeting began at 6 p.m., Thursday and ended at 7:20 a.m., Friday.

The procedure went something bright, young female interns.

like this. (I would recommend for those of you with weak constitutions to skip this paragraph). First there was a high-intensity, question-and-answer period where senators asked those persons begging for money why they were begging for money. After that was over, the body went into debate - in which they argued and talked and argued and talked. After that, members voted whether to vote on the issue. If they didn't agree by a simple majority to vote on the issue, they would speak some more. Then would vote on the issue at hand. They did this four times - dragging the meeting on for 13 and a half hours.

(if they agreed to it), the members

In that time, issues were debated, notes were passed, senators nodded off and experienced male senators exchanged meaningful glances with Amidst all this, an amendment to 'tail with a caption that says, "I the rec services fee was struck down before its initial bill passed, Student Pub got one of its two requests, and the Union got two separate fees.

Then around 5 a.m., there was a change in the atmosphere. A dark cloud came over the Senate chamber, and the mood got ugly. The arguments got a little more pointed. The replies became retorts. The Senate Chair's gavel bangs became more frequent and annoying.

Looking back at my notes from that night, I guess I got a little tired myself. The notes read "Heitschmidt ... weasel ... nice tie, though ... clip-on?" and "Heads will roll on the Union fee ... hell to pay ... sleepy .. can't drift off ... they'll pick my bones clean.' I also started making my own Jim's Journal cartoons. One shows Jim with really exaggerated features holding Mr. Peterson by the dropped acid, and it was OK."

Ed. note: The Collegian advo-cates neither drug use nor the calling of Heitschmidt a weasel. But this was serious business. Especially when they began to debate the SGA's proposed fee increase, which would enable them to hire another secretary, help improve Senate's image and perhaps increase the student body president's salary. There was a lot of private crowd

Letters Easter column spurns conflicts

Editor,

I would like to thank Brad Seabourn for his column on March 28. He brought up issues that are "hard to swallow" for those of Christian faith. He probably reads more of the good book than the people who base their beliefs in it.

I myself have recently come across evidence that is rather disturbing to those of Christian faith: evidence that Christ, between the ages of 12 and 30, was in India were he studied under Buddhist monks. Prophet Issa, as he is known there, studied meditation, etc. This, of course, would be poorly received by the traditional Christian community. It is good to question anything.

I do, however, differ with Seabourn's views on the Easter story. Sure, there are differences and conflicts. If, for example, we were to ask four witnesses of the same accident what they saw, we would probably receive four different accounts of the accident. There would probably be conflicts within each story. It is just a matter of perspective.

I believe in life after death. I assume that Seabourn believes "dead is dead." If he is right, neither of us will know. If I am right, we both will. Lyle Burkholder

K-State's track teams opened the outdoor season by hosting the KSU Invitational and Multi-Event meets

"The meet this weekend was just

The teams in the south have an advantage because they have been able to train outside longer than teams from the north due to the climate, so it was important for K-State to have competed outdoors and not go into the meet cold, Capriotti said.

Capriotti said he was pleasantly surprised by his teams' performances this weekend.

There were a lot of good times and distances turned in despite chilly temperatures and the fact that it is early in the season, he said.

This meet was a good opener for us," he said. "Both the men and women had good meets.'

An outstanding performance was turned in by junior Jon Rorabaugh in the javelin.

Rorabaugh, who has been working to improve his throwing style, threw a distance of 230-91/2 on his first attempt, to set a new school and personal record. The throw also eclipsed the provisional qualifying standard for the NCAA Outdoor Championships.

"Jon had the performance of the meet," Capriotti said.

Other individual Wildcat victories came from Kelly Zart in the pole vault (15-6), Charles Armstead in the 110-meter hurdles (14.69) and R.D. Cogswell in the high jump (6-9%).

Both K-State men's relay teams took first-place honors. The 400-meter relay with Thomas Randolph, Michael Simms, Charles Armstead and Ernest Green circled the track in

The time turned in by the team of three sophomores and a senior has already surpassed marks set last year, Capriotti said.

The mile relay team of Corey King, Simms, Marcus Wright and Tyrone Watkins recorded a time of 3:12.51, a time Capriotti was very pleased with.

"That's a good run for this point in the season," he said.

King also finished second in the 400-meters with a time of 48.4, behind ex-K-State standout Jeff Reynolds.

Watkins and Randolph placed second (21.7) and third (21.85), respectively in the 200-meters.

Brad Massey and Richard Croll completed a sweep of the javelin competition with throws of 204-51/2 and 199-7, respectively.

Jason Goertzen led a second through fifth-place sweep in the men's 1,500-meter run with a time of 3:54.6. He was followed by David Warders (3:55.5), Phil Byrne (3:55.7) and Todd Trask (4:00.7).

On the women's side, the K-State shot putters continued their dominance of the competition by sweeping the first four places.

All-American Angie Miller led the way with a throw of 48-0%. Shanele Stires was second (47-51/4), Dione Singleton was third (43-6) and Shannon Flanagan was fourth (43-11/4).

Miller (162-5), Flanagan (141-10), Julie Meyer (139-51/4) and Stires (134-9) took the top four places in the discus.

Stires also placed third in the javelin (129-91/4), and was joined by teammate Debbie Schmidt who took second with a throw of 147-10.

Another sweep was achieved by the K-State 1,500-meter runners. Paulette Staats was first with a time of 4:32.5, Janet Treiber was second with a time of 4:39.2 and Jennifer Hillier was third with a time of Hillier also picked up a victory in the 3,000-meter with a time of 10:19.0 and Staats added a thirdplace finish in the 800-meters (2:18.6).

Laura Ostmeyer won the 800-meters (2:16.9) followed by Staats and Ellarie Pesmark who finished fourth (2:18.8).

Freshman Nicole Green won the 200-meters in 24.8, Trish Joyner placed second in the 100-meter dash in 12.24 behind Junior College National Champion Beverly McDonald from Barton County and hurdler Verida Walter placed third in the 100-meter hurdles in 14.92.

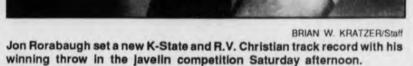

The sprinters combined to take second place in the 400-meter relay with a time of 46.19.

Freshman Lisa Fager finished second with 3,789 points in the heptathlon held as the KSU Multi-Event competition on Saturday.

The times, they are a-changin' at

In a year that has seen several somewhat surprising reversals of fortune for Wildcat athletic teams, the

The math is simple, really. In 1989-90, the football team won but one game, and the hoop squad won 17. One plus 17 equals 18, right? In 1990-91, the gridders won five, and the basketball team won ... yeah, they won 13. Five plus 13 equals ... you get the picture, don't you?

The picture looked quite a bit prettier last fall than it did at the end of the men's hoop season.

Clouding things even further in Wildcatland is the turmoil surrounding the volleyball and women's basketball programs.

After 11 years at the helm, former volleyball coach Scott Nelson mysteriously decided to resign in January after his team continued its recent downward slide in 1990.

And on the women's hoops front, Coach Susan Yow and her team took turns taking shots at one another in the media before, during and after the Coach Russ Bunker's squad looking like anything but a perennial Big Eight cellar-dweller — finished in a tie for fourth in the 18-team Vanderbilt Durango Boot Music City Intercollegiate tourney this past weekend in Nashville, Tenn.

And in finishing fourth, the Wildcats were just five strokes from the team title. "We had a great tournament, and I'm very proud of the kids," Bunker said following Sunday's final round of the 54-hole event. "They were disappointed that we didn't win, but they have no reason to hang their heads."

Bunker's five-man crew cut five strokes off of the deficit it faced after 36 holes, but still dropped a place - from third to - in the final team standings.

Host Vanderbilt won the tourney, with a total team score of 916. The Commodores shot a 306 as a team Sunday.

Memphis State was second with a team total of 918, just three shots better than K-State. The Tigers slumped to a 303 team total Sunday after Saturday's 300.

Sliding past K-State to finish third was Baylor, which had a hot Sunday round of 297 - the best team round posted by any of the leaders over the duration of the team total of 920, just a shot better than K-State's 921 total.

Leading the way for K-State individually was junior Bill Graham, who shot a one-under-par 71 in Sunday's final round to finish in a tie for 13th overall at 230. Graham was 39th overall entering the final 18 holes, but then blistered the course with the Wildcats' best individual round of the

Jim Brenneman, a sophomore from Hesston, finished 19th overall with a 231, just a shot off Graham's total. Brenneman was the only Wildcat to shoot sub-80 rounds all three days. Freshman redshirt Will Siebert

Trailing his four teammates was Richard Laing. The sophomore from Bonner Springs had solid Saturday and Sunday rounds of 76 and 75 after his openinground total of 90 cost him medalist contention and may have cost his team a shot at a higher place.

Other Big Eight teams competing included Missouri, which finished 10th overall, and Nebraska. which finished 11th.

NEW ORLEANS - Dena Head made two free throws to tie the score at 60 in regulation, then hit five more in overtime to give Tennessee a 70-67 victory over Virginia and the NCAA women's championship.

It was the third NCAA championship for Tennessee, which won it in 1987 and 1989, was runner-up in 1984 and tied for third in 1988 and 1986. Tennessee also lost in the AIAW championship game in 1980

Virginia led 60-55 with 1:25 to go in regulation when Head was fouled by Tonya Cardoza and converted a three-point play. Tammi Reiss and Dawn Staley both missed with 48 seconds remaining in regulation, but Tennessee couldn't get the ball across midcourt against the Virginia press and had to call timeout, barely beating the time

With seven seconds left in regulation, Staley fouled Head, who made both free throws to tie it.

Cardoza gave Virginia a brief lead in overtime, but Head hit two more free throws. Peggy Evans scored on a rebound, and Head made a free throw to make it 66-62

Baseball squad loses 3 of

BILL LANG Sports Reporter

NORMAN, Okla. - What surely would have been a boon to K-State baseball fell to bust as the Oklahoma Sooners were able win three out of four games from the Wildcats during Easter weekend.

Oklahoma set the tone for the weekend in the opening contest, with three different pitchers combining to strike out 11 'Cats. It turned out being the kind of weekend where K-State would get its hits, except when it needed them most.

In the first game, which the 'Cats lost 8-2, they had 11 hits. The Sooners, on the other hand, used a pair of explosions to collect three runs in the third and four in the fifth.

In the second game, though, it was Chris Hmielewski who did the feasting, as he scattered six hits over seven innings and allowed only one run and struck out five as K-State ran by the Sooners 7-1.

Then the stage was set for one of the most disappointing losses ever inflicted on any Wildcat team.

Going into the bottom of the seventh and final inning of the third game, K-State was up 7-5 with one more out to go.

Sooners Brent Bohrofen and Wade Inman — on second and first respectively - started running with the pitch to teammate Scott Marr.

Marr lifted Dan Driskill's pitch to leftfield, where Brian Culp was makng the necessary adjustments to catch it. Oklahoma fans were gathering up their belongings getting ready to head home and K-State fans were getting ready to celebrate.

But something went wrong, and Culp booted the ball off his glove. As Culp scrambled to pick up the ball, Bohrofen scampered home. Oklahoma was down 7-6.

On the ensuing relay to 'Cats third baseman Brad Ripplemeyer, K-State had a chance to cut down Inman at the plate and win the contest. The throw was wide up the first base side and Inman slid home with the tying

"I'm not sure what happened," said K-State coach Mike Clark. "It might have been the (left field) wall, the ground, the lights ... I just don't know.'

In the extra inning, K-State was able to get Blair Hanneman as far as second base with one out. However, Oklahoma pitcher Scott Moore was able to get Lance Wilson and Craig Wilson to fly out to end the threat.

In the Sooner bottom of the eighth, OU hitting star Marty Neff - who finished the series with six hits in 13 at bats, with two homers, four runs scored and nine RBIs - was walked and Marr came to the plate.

Marr promptly lined to the deepest part of the right field corner and Neff, who was running with the pitch, was able to score the winning run.

After the game Clark was at a loss for words to explain the loss.

"On games like this you keep asking yourself why, and you keep asking why," he said looking to the ball diamond as if he was looking for some sort of divine answer. "All you can do is try and go out on the next game and get back on track.

"To tell you the truth, I haven't even talked to Brian about what happened," Clark said. "I spent some time with him when we got back to the hotel and so did a number of the other players. We had too.'

But maybe the question of whether the 'Cats could rebound had been bumped to another day.

Sunday, K-State pitcher Tim Churchman and Oklahoma hurler Matt Ruebel put on a pitching

Through the first six innings, Churchman allowed two hits and one run and looked to be getting stronger as the game went on. Ruebel on the other hand looked like a pitbull set Ruebel, through the first 61/5 innings, gave up seven hits while striking out 10.

'Matty was on from the beginning," said Oklahoma coach Larry Cochell. "He had to get his stuff going inside, and fortunately he was able to get that pitch over the inside part of the plate."

The Sooners rallied for two runs in their bottom of the seventh to tie the contest at three runs each.

Another bungled play by a Wildcat helped the Sooners to victory. In the top of the eighth inning, Van Torian booted a ball that would have been the first out.

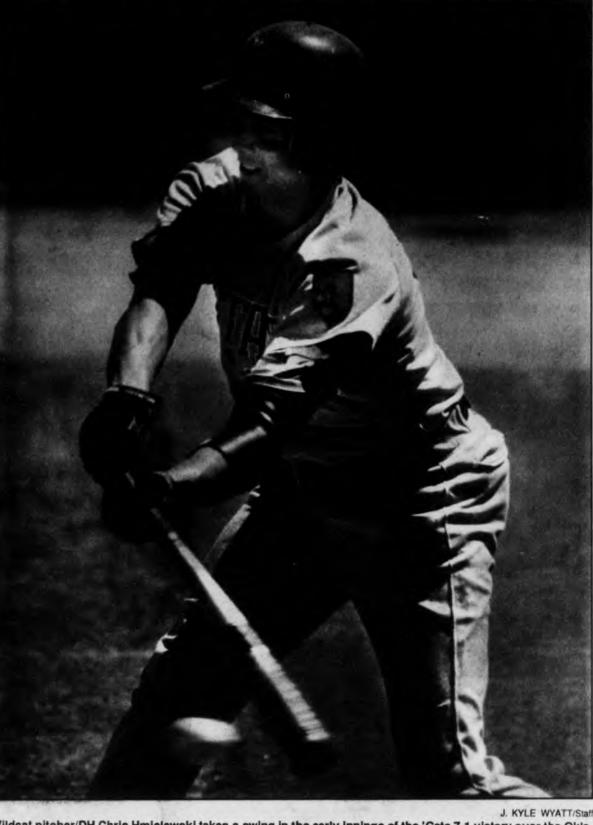

Oklahoma's Neff came to bat and tripled home teammate Scott Campbell for the go-ahead run. Bohrofen hit a sacrifice fly to right field for an insurance run, making the score 5-3.

struck out two batters and got a ground out ball to end the game and the series.

"I just don't know what to say about this weekend," Clark said. "We had a great chance to get a good start in the Big Eight. Right now, indivi-

Oklahoma reliever Korey Keling dually we're playing good, but as a team we're not. We are just playing good enough to lose.

"We need to regroup and get tocused and concentrate on what we need to do. We have four series left and we need to win the series if we want to keep going on."

Wildcat pitcher/DH Chris Hmielewski takes a swing in the early innings of the 'Cats 7-1 victory over the Oklahoma Sooners Saturday afternoon in Norman, Okla. Hmlelewski got the win on the mound.

J. KYLE WYATT/Staff Third baseman Brad Rippelmeyer makes a throw to first on a soft grounder late in the 'Cats 5-3 loss to OU in Norman Sunday afternoon. The Sooners won three of four games in the weekend series.

Rowing teams successful

The K-State rowing team returned from the Washington University Regatta in St. Louis this weekend with several honors. The men's varsity team captured first place in the open competition with the fastest time of the day. The team covered the 1,400-meter course in 5:13.56.

The men's varsity lightweight boat and novice boat brought home third-place awards.

On the women's side, third place was earned by the varsity open boat.

The men and women then combined to win the mixed race.

Gubicza to start year on DL

HAINES CITY, Fla. (AP) — Pitcher Mark Gubicza will start the season on the disabled list, the Kansas City Royals said. Gubicza continues to recover ahead of schedule from arthroscopic shoulder surgery last Aug. 2. But the Royals said Saturday they will put the righthander on the disabled list to continue his rehabilitation program.

Gubicza will be eligible to play April 14. His return will depend on his progress, Manager John Wathan said.

"He's still not throwing a whole lot of pitches each time out, and he needs to build up arm strength," Wathan said. "One, two or three innings is a little different than a regular-season game.'

When Gubicza is cleared to return, the Royals plan to use him as a middle reliever, perhaps for the entire season. His maximum pitch limit is expected to stay at about 90 all season.

Gibson homers in victory

HAINES CITY, Fla. (AP) — Kirk Gibson homered in the second inning and Mark Gubicza hurled four shutout innings as the Kansas City Royals defeated Boston 5-2 Sunday.

Gibson became the first left-handed hitter to homer off Red Sox left-handed pitcher Matt Young since April 8, 1987. Gubicza, who had shoulder surgery last August and will begin the season on the disabled list, held the Red Sox to four singles for four innings. He has a 2.08 earned run average in five exhibition outings.

The Royals' dozen-hit attack included two hits each by Brian McRae, Terry Shumpert, George Brett and Gibson.

Kansas ready to battle Can Duke make magic twice after upset over UNLV?

By the Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - So what

now, Duke?

With UNLV and one horrible memory out of the way, will it be a championship at last or a championship game disaster again?

A year ago, Duke came up flat after a tough, up-tempo, full-court semifinal win over Arkansas and lost by 30 points to UNLV 48 hours later.

The Blue Devils (31-7) turned the tables on the Runnin' Rebels Saturday night with a 79-77 victory, but UNLV didn't give up its chance at a repeat title and undefeated season without an intense, physical 40 minutes.

Now the championship game opponent Monday night will be Kansas (27-7), a 79-73 winner over North

Can it happen again? Did the Blue Devils just lay out too much to get a chance at cutting down the nets?

Duke's stars, Christian Laettner and Bobby Hurley, both played the whole game, and Laettner was so dehydrated afterward he needed an hour and 15 minutes to provide a drug-testing urine sample.

"Yesterday was an even harder game because Vegas was better," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said Sunday. "They were just so good, but our team is different. They're more resilient. It has listened even better."

Duke has made more Final Four appearances without a title than any other school — eight. Its ninth trip and fourth in a row has brought its fifth championship game appearance and third since 1986.

"The accomplishments of this team have been great," said senior forward Greg Koubek, the only player to appear in four Final Fours. This is my last opportunity to do this, and we are going to have to be focused and we are going to be ready. What happened the last three years will not have any effect at all on this year's final.'

Duke did have quite an effect on this year's final by knocking off the team that everyone from experts to casual fans knew would be there.

When Kansas left the court after beating North Carolina in the opening semifinal game, it would have been easy to assume the Jayhawks were thinking about the Runnin' Rebels and how they would handle the team with 34 wins in as many games and a 28-point average margin of victory.

"I thought Duke had an edge from a player's standpoint because of the humiliating loss," Kansas forward Mark Randall said.

"I picked Duke," front-courtmate Mike Maddox said.

Even if it was Sunday morning quarterbacking, the Jayhawks were not disappointed in losing the chance at beating UNLV and were apprehensive at facing Duke.

"I would have been relieved if St. Mary's Sisters of the Blind had beaten Vegas, but I don't think I'm going to sit up here and say I'm relieved to play Duke," Kansas coach Roy Williams said.

There weren't any injuries on or off the court in the semifinal wins, and the matchups taking shape are interesting

Randall, who had 16 points and 11 rebounds against the Tar Heels, will most likely go against Laettner, who had 28 points against UNLV, 20 in the first half when he went inside to draw fouls and open things up for the cutters and slashers in the motion offense.

The two know each other well from an extended summer as teammates on the U.S. national team, which was coached by Krzyzewski.

"He really worked on his moves down low this summer, and then I saw him this year a couple of times and he was hitting 3-pointers," Randall said. "Last night he had a great game. He hit the free throws to clinch it, and I heard he had a great first half. He's just a great player."

Laettner returned the compliments.

"He makes players better, and he's as big a reason why they are where they are," Laettner said. "Whoever checks him has to be ready."

Now college basketball has to get ready for an unexpected champion.

be in title tilt again Williams, KU glad to

By the Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS - If contempt were all that familiarity breeds, Roy Williams would be walking around Indianapolis with a snarl on his face.

But for the studious-minded, familiarity can also give birth to insight. And if Kansas overcomes Duke Monday night to capture its second NCAA championship in three years, Roy Williams' familiarity with both Final Four opponents just might prove decisive.

As a 10-year Carolina assistant and Dean Smith protege, Williams spent hundreds of hours breaking down Duke game films and studying the style of Blue Devils' coach Mike Krzyzewski.

Williams' knowledge of Carolina no doubt helped the Jayhawks carve out a 79-73 semifinal victory over the Tar Heels Saturday night. And next up is Duke. Throughout Williams' decade at Chapel Hill, the Duke campus at Durham was only eight miles away. The Tar Heels and Blue Devils play each other at least twice a year, sometimes more.

It's almost as if Roy Williams has come home to the ACC. Isn't this better than if Kansas had been paired off, say, against a couple of teams from the Pac-10, where Williams would barely know the point guard from the trainer?

"Actually, I'd rather be playing two last-place teams from the Pac-10," joked Williams, who dislikes talking about his familiarity with Carolina and Duke but will when pressed.

"It's true, I've spent a lot of time breaking down Duke game films," he said. As a Carolina recruiter, Williams also got to know many of Duke's current players.

"I've known Christian Laettner since he was a junior in high school," Williams said. "It helps in the sense that I do know these players. I do know these teams. We feel like we've got some things covered. It does help."

Not many formal introductions will be required prior to Monday night's tipoff. Kansas center Mark Randall joined Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski and Blue Devil stars Laettner and Bobby Hurley on the U.S. team in the World Championships last summer in Argentina.

But familiarity, warns Williams, can be a two-way street. People keep saying his Kansas team is a mirror reflection of Carolina, and Krzyzewski ought to know Carolina at least as well as Williams knows Duke.

"I'm sure Duke feels more comfortable playing against us than if they had not played anybody like us," Williams said.

Regardless of how many times Williams has studied Duke game films through the years, it's too late for any brilliant coaching tactics. "I guess it is easier than playing somebody that I don't know at all. But then again, there can't be any great coaching moves today in practice that are going to win the game Monday night," he said. "There really is not a whole lot you can do at this point."

Randall became good friends last summer with Laettner and Hurley and came away with great respect for Krzyzewski.

We spent quite a bit of time working against each other and playing together," he said. "They want to win in the worst way. Bobby's not going to back down from anyone. Christian and I would try to give him a little trouble, but he wouldn't back down. He's tough."

Echoing his coach, Randall said he learned nothing about the Duke floor boss or players that will help beat

"We were under Coach K for quite a bit," he said. "But it was more of a blending of talents, an all-star type of situation. He and coach Williams are exactly alike in some ways, they want to win in the worst way."

Raborn goes door to door for city commission office

JIM STRUBER

Campaigning on a local level is not five-minute photo opportunities and slick TV advertisements, but meeting people at their front door for a brief exchange on the issues.

Craig Raborn, candidate for city commission and senior in geography, said campaigning directly to the public was crucial for the success of nis campaign.

The city commission election will be Tuesday, and there are three positions to be filled and six candidates.

After a morning of door-to-door campaigning, Raborn and his three remaining campaign volunteers met Saturday on the east side of the K-State Union.

They pulled out a Manhattan map that separated the city into wards and precincts and decided to campaign door-to-door in Ward 3, Precinct 4. This precinct is south from Anderson Avenue across from the Lee Grade School and includes Grandview Drive and Wickham Road.

After stopping at three empty homes, Raborn was able to speak to Jose Escamille, Manhattan resident. Raborn talked briefly to Escamille about the issues he wanted to address if elected city commissioner.

'You bet I will vote in the election," Escamille said.

Escamille talked about what he felt the important issues were.

"I am a retired military man and have lived in many states," said Escamille. "This state has the highest personal property taxes I have ever seen. In my opinion, this state needs a tax Escamille said he read about Raborn in the paper, but noted the lack of campaign advertisements.

"I wish he would have gone around earlier," said Escamille. "He could have gotten more exposure. I haven't seen him in the Mercury. He has no ads." Dori Lambert, an associate with University Counceling Services and Manhattan resident, said she voted in all the local elections, although she has only been in Manhattan for just more than six years.

"I don't know the politics of this community. This is a real tight-knit community," said Lambert. "Always nice seeing people going door-todoor. This is the first commission candidate I have seen."

She said she was concerned about the way Manhattan grows.

"Cooperation between the University and Manhattan in terms of economic development and placement is important," she said. "I like to see them work together.'

Fred Wingert, sophomore in business and political science and campaign volunteer, was doing some campaigning on his own.

Wingert talked to Jay McGehe as he was working the soil on his garden plot with a pitchfork. They talked a minute about the bleak prospects of farmers in Kansas and McGehe's chances of planting more rhubarb.

Wingert handed McGhee campaign literature and asked him to vote in the city commission race. McGehe said he voted in every election and thanked Wingert. He said he was confident the city commission would do a good job and wasn't too concerned about any particular issues.

'When you are retired, there isn't much you can do, but take each day as it comes and be thankful," said McGehe. "They can handle it, a six-person commission is a good balance."

Wingert met Raborn and Diane Pratt, sophomore in interior design and campaign volunteer, on the 400 block of Wickham road, adjacent to a Pratt was optimistic about the responses she heard from the residents and anxious to talk to more people.

"This is kind of fun," Pratt said. Raborn also visited Ben Brent, Manhattan resident, and talked to him for a minute and gave him campaign literature.

Brent said commissioner's need to be concerned about Manhattan's infrastructure, particularly streets and drainage.

"I think they are doing a good job," he said.

Raborn and the two volunteers decided to go to another location, but ■ See RABORN, Page 9

Lunch Bag Theater provides arena for friendly criticism

WADE RAMSEY

Collegian Reporter

At 11:30 each Thursday, the Purple Masque Theatre presents the Lunch Bag Theater. The free one-act plays last between 30 and 45 minutes and will run through the end of the semester.

"We don't get any profit from this venture," said Lewis Shelton, associate professor in the speech department.

The performances act as a workshop for advanced acting and directing students, he said. "Each student is involved in two one—act plays," he said. "They have spent about three to four weeks practicing. The students choose their own script, but the theater department helps provide a few props and costumes. Students said they find the program very rewarding.

"I like it. You get very close to the handful of people you work with. It's an intimate way to learn," said Amy Strathman, a junior in radio and television and actress in the Lunch Bag Theater. "It's easier to take criticism from people you know better, especially if it's in a positive and constructive manner," she said. Shelton said the only costs the speech department pays is the cost of royalties for scripts. This is usually between $20 and $25.

"The goal is to concentrate on the communication process between a director and the performers, not the technical aspects associated with props and costumes," Shelton said.

The program is helpful to both student actors and directors.

"It's really helpful for the stu-dent directors," Strathman said.

The Lunch Bag Theater program began in 1977, and has run each spring semester since then. If enrollment in the theater prog-rams continues to increase, Shelton said, the Lunch Bag Theater might run in the fall semesters as

BETH GAINES

Collegian Reporter

Waving to the audience, Shawna Stevens, junior in radio/television agricultural journalism, took a victory lap around Weber arena after being crowned 1991 Miss K-State Rodeo Queen.

Stevens, a member of the K-State rodeo team, was selected after a week of pageant activities.

Penny Garrett, senior in finance and the 1990 rodeo queen, coordinated this year's pageant.

Garrett said to qualify as a contestant, the girls must be full-time K-State students, maintain a 2.0 or higher grade point average, and be between the 18-24 years old.

"It is not all glamour. It takes a lot of work to get ready for this pageant. You must understand the horse industry and be prepared to answer any questions about the sport of rodeo and horse management."

The contestants were judged in categories including modeling, speaking ability, written exam, in-terview and horsemanship ability.

The horsemanship portion of the pageant tested the girls on their riding ability.

'Horses were brought in that none of the contestants were familiar with. The judges selected a riding pattern for the contestant to complete, and then they completed a second riding pattern of their own choice," Garrett said.

The other contestants included Heather Lynn, junior in ag business, Susan Mestaugh, senior in exercise science, Kym Sell, junior in ag business, Lea Starkebaum, junior in elementary education, and Dana Teter, sophomore in pre-law. Teter was selected as first runner-up in the pageant.

"It takes a lot of time to prepare for the pageant, especially getting ready for the speech contest and the modeling competition," Teter said.

Bulls life-and-death business to rodeo clowns

Crowd entertainers share responsibility to protect cowboys

BETH GAINES

Collegian Reporter

Grease-painted faces, colorful costumes and a desire to entertain crowds are criteria for all clowns. But rodeo clowns are in a category of their very own.

They have a life-and-death responsibility.

A bullrider puts his life into the hands of a rodeo clown every time he climbs on the back of a raging bull trapped within a chute. It is the clown's job to distract the bull while the rider makes it safely to the arena's edge after a ride is finished.

The K-State Rodeo was no different. Complete with baggy, denim shorts and psychedelic shirts, the clowns entertained the crowd during other events. But when the bull-riding began, clowns Randy Hinton and Greg Harrell were all business. Hinton, Bartlesville, Okla., has been fighting bulls since 1979. Harrell, Hutchinson, began five years

Hinton said entertaining the crowd is part of his job, but his responsibility is to protect the

Harrell said a good clown will prevent the cowboy from getting into a dangerous situation with a bull after he gets on the ground or gets his hand caught in the rigging rope, which he wraps around his hand to hold onto the bull.

Hinton and Harrell have earned the respect of bullriders across the Midwest, as each has won the Cowboys Regional Rodeo Association's Bullfighter of the Year Award more than once. Harrell has had the honor since 1989.

During all performances of this year's rodeo, Hinton and Harrell demonstrated their skills in fighting bulls when several bullriders had bad luck in their event and were

"I run, lift weights and play other sports," Hinton said. During the off season, Hinton is a physical education instructor.

Hinton and Harrell said they believe mental preparation is an important facet of the training process. Harrel said he visualizes his sport.

"You have to picture yourself fighting bulls - have the right attitude and state of mind," Harrell

Shuttle to carry K-State research

Faculty, students equip experiments expected to be part of the recovery for Atlantis flight

JODELL LAMER Collegian Reporter

The launch of the Space Shuttle Atlantis will mark the beginning of a new era of K-State research.

The five-day mission, tentatively scheduled to begin April 5, will carry several experiments prepared by faculty and graduate students in the biology department. It will be the first time for the department to have experiments aboard a shuttle

Dale Claassen and Lynnette Debell, graduate students in biology, are team when the shuttle returns from its mission. They will remove the experiments from the shuttle when it lands at Edwards Air Force Base.

NASA currently sponsors two programs at K-State. BioServe Space Technologies is a center for the commercial development of space and has existed at K-State for over three years. The second program, the Center for Gravitational Studies in Cellular and Developmental Biology, has only been in existence since January. Kenneth Buyle, coordinator for BioServe Space Technologies at K-

State, said the experiments aboard the shuttle were made possible through K-State's association with NASA through BioServe Space Technologies.

Buyle said getting experiments aboard a shuttle flight has been a very long process.
"A lot of people are amazed we've been able to get on as fast as we have having only being involved with NASA for three years. It is surprising to many people," he said. "Because of the Challenger accident there have been experiments standing in line for ten years waiting to get on.

Students and faculty are also involved with other experiments involving microgravity. Later this month, a Joust sounding rocket will be launched from Kennedy Space Center carrying several experiments from K-State. Other experiments will be aboard shuttle missions scheduled in the next few years.

Recently, students and faculty took part in microgravity experiments aboard KC-135 flights from KC-135 flights.

Smith helps integrate blood transfusions into animal field

STACY HILBURN

Collegian Reporter

Jo Smith, professor of pathology, developed an interest in blood transfusions while working under one of the top hemotologists in the world. Smith was raised around animals on a farm in Texas.

"People look up to vets," he said, "because they are well-educated and can scientifically help.

Smith minimized his time spent getting a veterinary education by finishing his pre-professional requirements in two, instead of the normal

Then he spent four years at Texas A&M in the College of Veterinary Medicine. During this time, he spent a year in the ROTC, but couldn't keep up his grades.

"ROTC at Texas A&M is like West Point," he said.

After three years of graduate school at the University of California at Davis, he worked at a hospital under a man working with transfu-

His general interests are with blood typing, iron and diseases, but his primary interest — and a topic on which he's considered an expert - is red blood cells.

He's also the administration side of the pathology department. He develops the curriculum, makes up the tests along with an educational consultant and participates in and arranges various meetings.

Most importantly, however, Smith said, K-State is one of five veterinary schools that is a recipient of a grant from the National Institute of Health, the Transfusion Medicine Academic Award. This is a five-year nonrefundable grant, which was started to emphasize transfusions.

Prior to AIDS, transfusion was not a glamorous field, so the program was started to educate professional schools and encourage research in transfusion medicine," he said.

"Vets are behind a lot still. For example, some still take blood in glass bottles, but mostly in plastic bags," he said.

This can all be changed by education, Smith said. "First you start by educating the in-coming students, then you go around to meetings and set up displays."

A course in transfusion medicine is not practical these days for students, but to initiate those interested and to give them good training is, Smith said. The grant indirectly pays for two students who focus on transfusion medicine.

An animal transfusion is the same act and is done for the same reasons as a human transfusion. It is transferring one, or all, of the components of blood from one animal to another. And the reason for a transfusion is a large amount of blood loss.

For veterinary medicine, the two components of blood are plasma and red blood cells. In humans, there are even more separations, Smith said.

Most transfusions are performed on small animals, primarily cats and "Most are done on companion animals," he said. "People tend to spend more money on them." At K-State, the blood given to ani-

Super Cities Walk helps in fight with MS

HOPE SWARTZ Collegian Reporter

Six area communities, including Manhattan, will conduct a Super Cities Walk for multiple sclerosis April 6.

Participants in Topeka, Lawrence, Marysville, Lyons, Beloit and Manhattan will begin a ninemile walk at 8 p.m. at designated locations in their town.

Manhattan participants will start at St. Thomas More Catholic Church and walk past Memorial Hospital, K-State campus, Annebrook Park, St. Isodore's Catholic Church and back to St. Thomas

"MS is one of the most disabling diseases and one of the saddest," said Jackie Rawlings, physical therapist at St. Mary Hospital and co-coordinator of the event.

"It strikes people in the prime of their life. Most are starting families and building a life when they're suddenly afflicted with a disease that will cause them to become progressively disabled," she Researchers think MS is caused by a virus or series of viruses breaking down myelin, the fatty substance that surrounds and protects the nerve fibers of the brain and spinal cord. When the myelin is destroyed, nerve impulses to the brain are interrupted and distorted. Hardened patches then develop over the damaged area.

MS affects the nervous system, which is why each case is so varied, said Mary Klenda, cocoordinator of the event, who suffers from the disease.

The symptoms and effects of the disease vary according to which nerve develops a lesion and is damaged. Symptoms range from blurring vision to complete paralysis.

MS is not hereditary but strikes at random. Those afflicted are usually female caucasions between the ages of 20 and 40, Klenda said.

The money raised by the walkers will go to fund research of the disease and support programs for MS sufferers. A quarter of a million Americans have MS, with nearly 200 new cases diagnosed every week.

In Manhattan, between 35 to 40 suffer from the disease, said David Buhler, coordinator of the Topeka MS Society branch.

"They're working on identifying a way to prevent it and a way to ease the effects of those chronic sufferers who already have it," Buhler said.

"There is no cure, but researchers are beginning to identify the virus or series of viruses that trigger the disease. They are also working on a way to reinsulate the nerve fibers so messages can get past the nerve damage to the muscles.'

The money raised in each city will be divided between the national foundation and area support chapters. Forty percent will go to the national level for research and administration costs and 60 percent will stay in each city, Buhler

Judges prove beauty truly in beholder's eye

Flower and plant judges to compete in California in April

DARLA GOODMAN

Collegian Reporter

A team of K-State students will be traveling to California Polytechnic in San Luis Obispo, Calif., to test its skills in judging the quality of flowers and plants.

The annual National Intercollegiate Flower Judging Contest, April 3-5, co-sponored by Pi Alpha Xi, the floriculture and ornamental horticulture honorary, and the Society of American Florists, brings from 12 to 20 teams across the country together to compete in a rigorous day of judging, said Kent Kimmins, associate professor of floriculture.

Regina Stutterheim, sophomore in consumer affairs, said she became involved with the team through a course in floriculture. She had done similar judging through her 4-H club.

Since team tryouts in January, she its quality. This is especially imporhas been practicing with the other two team members for three hours a week. All team members will compete in the contest for the first time because no one may judge more than once, Kimmins said.

Kelli Eidson, junior in retail floriculture, said Kimmins has tried to expose them to as many types of plants and flowers as possible, but there still may be things in the contest they have not seen before.

Eidson said she learned something about judging from a job in a flower "You can't send out the junk in the flower shop, so you know what to look for," she said. Eidson said in most cases, you not only need to judge the quality of the plant or flower, but often you need to identify it in order to place a value on tant in cut flowers; potted plants are more general, she said. The contest, which is set up by the team coaches, allows three minutes to judge each class in categories such as flower quality, pests or diseases, water residue, color and straight stems. Kimmins said the 28 classes make a long day for the contestants.

'That's the biggest problem they get pooped out before they're through," he said.

Kimmins said some classes may be thrown out after the judging is complete because flowers may open up or foliage condition may change, which would affect the judgements.

Kimmins said the team finished as high as fourth in the 1990 competition.

Rebels, Iraqis battle for capitals

By the Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus - Kurdish rebels said Iraqi forces backed by helicopter gunships, warplanes and artillery pounded two provincial capitals Sunday but had not managed to capture the cities.

Iraq, however, claimed it had chased the rebels out of the northern cities of Dohuk and Erbil, and said government troops were welcomed by cheering residents. It was impossible to verify either side's claims.

Forces loyal to Saddam launched a major offensive last week against the Kurdish insurgents, who had captured nearly all of their historic homeland.

Iraqi authorities accused the rebels of going on a rampage of murder, looting and destruction while they held the city.

The insurgents, however, accused Saddam's troops of atrocities against civilians and appealed to the allies for help.

Arts and Sciences Senator Melissa Garcia said supporters of the bill were accusing opponents of laziness simply because they disagreed.

"It just seems to me there is a certain group of people, if we don't conform to what they want, we're told we're not doing our jobs," Garcia said.

At just after 7 a.m. Friday, Senate rejected the fee increase when it failed to win the two-thirds majority needed for approval. The final vote was 36-11 with 4 abstaining.

The debate about the Union's fee increases lacked the acrimony, which marked much of the night's discussion.

Under the bill passed by Senate, the Union fee will increase from $17 to $22 for full-time students beginning in Fall 1991. The part-time students fee will increase from $8.50 to $11. Summer school students will increase from $1.35 per credit hour to $1.75 per credit hour.

The Union's repair and replacement fee will increase from $1.25 for full-time students to $3. For part-time students, the fee will increase from 70 cents to $1.50. Summer students will begin paying 70 cents per credit hour.

I was wondering what the heck she was talking about. Earlier in the marathon she changed her vote on the Union issue to "Yes" from "Abstain," and then turned to her fellow senator and said, "I wasn't prepared to vote on this."

Reverse logic seemed to be the theme that night. And I think the word reiterate was reiterated more than 100 times.

I left around 6:40 a.m., before they voted on it. I'd had enough. There are a hell of a lot of good people in there, but many of the good ones seem trapped and out-of-place. It's the smooth ones who make waves. The most obnoxious dictate policy. The loudest are heard the clearest. But I'm sure it's not like that in real world.

The drums of American Indian tribes are much like the altar in a church, acting as the focal point for spiritual well-being, said Native American Henry Collins.

Collins, a member of the Ponka Tribe in Oklahoma, showed about 65 people how to make a drum during a noon demonstration Friday in the K-State Union. Collins also talked about the history and importance of the drums.

"In tribal ceremonies, the drum is like an altar. It is holy ground," Collins said. "The drum is the center for the power given by The Almighty."

The process of drum—making is complex, tedious and takes between three and four weeks, Collins said.

"The job is restricted to a few

"The job is restricted to a few craftsmen. You will never see the process industrialized. It is too complex." The hides used for the drum is usually raw cow hide, aquired directly from a butcher. Such hides cost about $60, Collins said, and the rarer buffalo hide costs about $200.

The hide is first soaked in hydrated lime for as much as a week.

The hide is stirred twice a day until the lime has loosened the hide's pores and the hair will come out

Once the hide reaches this stage, Collins said, the lime is rinsed off and all the hair pulled out. Once the fat is trimmed, the hide is ready to be cut and laced.

Collins laced two cleaned hides together, demonstrating the complex lacing procedure required to make a good drum. The lace is also a strip of cowhide.

Once the hides were partially laced, Collins slipped the sides around a drum barrel and finished the lacing process.

"The drum can be almost anything, a hollowed tree, barrel, or something else."

Next, the drum is placed outside

"Let the elements dry the drum. The wind and sun will make a good drum, not a heat lamp," Collins said. "It drys in about a week.

"As it drys, the rawhide will pull tighter and tighter. Drying hide could crush a metal rim if it is flawed," he said.

With a razor-sharp knife, Collins shaves the excess fat off the drum hide as it dries.

"If you don't shave your drum, you will be able to smell it from a mile away," Collins said.

The only tools Collins uses to make drums are a hammer, several leather punches, a file and a handful of knives.

"People ask me to come talk to them from around the country. I have gotten requests to make drums from Canada and Europe," he said.

Collins makes about 15 drums each year, and each drum is worth between $300 and $500.

Pilate therefore, willing to release Jesus, spake again to them. But they cried, saying, Crucify him, crucify him.

And he said unto them the third time.

And he said unto them the third time, Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cause of death in him: I will therefore chastise him, and let him go.

And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. And the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed. And Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required. And he released unto them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison, whom they had desired; but he delivered Jesus to their will.

And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon, a cy-re-ni-an, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus. And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him. But Jesus turning unto them said, Daughters of Jeruselem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children. For, behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck. Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us. For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?

And there were also two other, malefactors, led with him to be put to death. And when they were come to the place, which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left. And a superscription also was written over him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew. THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.
And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying. If thou be Christ, save thyself and us.

But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss.

And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, Today shalt thou be with me in paradise.

And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour. And the sun was darkened, and the vail of the temple was rent in the midst. And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost.

And, behold, there was a man named Joseph, a counsellor; and he was a good man, and a just: [The same had not consented to the counsel and deed of them;] he was of Ar-1-ma-thae'a, a city of the Jews: who also himself waited for the kingdom of God. This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus. And he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepuichre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid. And that day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on.

And the women also, which came with him

And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments: and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment.

NOW upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them. And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre. And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus. And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men stood by them in shining garments: And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen: remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Gaillee, Saying, the Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucifled, and the third day rise again. And they remembered his words. And returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things unto the eleven, and to all the rest.

It was Mary Magdalene, and Jo-an'na, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things unto the apostles. And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not. Then arose Peter, and ran unto the sepuichre; and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass.

And, behold, two of them went that same day to a village called Emma'us, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs. And they talked together of all these things which had happened. Add it came to pass that, while they communed together and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them. But their eyes were holden that they should not know him.

And he said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad? And the one of them, whose name was Cle-o-pas answering said unto him, Art thou only a straiger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these

And he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people; And how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him. But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, today is the third day since these things were done. Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepuichre: And when they found not his body, they came, saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive. And certain of them which were with us went to the sepuichre, and found it even so as the women had said; but him they saw not.

Then he said unto them O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken: Ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself.

And they drew nigh unto the village, whither they went: and he made as thought he would have gone further. But they constrined him, saying, Abide with us for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them.

And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vanished out of their sight. And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?

And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them. Saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.

And they told what things were done in the way and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.

Manhattan elections today

By the Collegian Staff

Polling places will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. throughout Riley County as communities elect city councils, city commissions and school boards.

There are no polling places on campus, but students living on campus will vote at Marlatt School, said Ilene Colbert, Riley County Clerk.

As the percent of voters goes up, it's harder to predict the results. -Craig Raborn

Junior in geography and City Commission candidate

Voter turnout for the general election is expected to be higher than for the primary election, she said.

"I expect about a 30 percent turnout, compared to 14 percent for the primary," Colbert said.

Six candidates, including K-State student Craig Raborn, junior in geography, are running for three positions open on the Manhattan City Commission.

"As the percent of voters goes up, it's harder to predict the results," Raborn said. "But I do expect a higher turnout of voters."

Other candidates for City Commission are incumbent Roger Maughmer; Edith Stunkel, associate director of anthropology and social work; Helen Cooper, management analyst for K-State facilities planning; Jim Dubois, associate professor of interior architecture; and Linda Ferguson.

The top two vote-getters will serve four-year terms, and the third place winner will serve a two-year term.

Voters in three school districts in the county will elect school board members. The districts are Unified School District 383 (Manhattan), USD 378 (Riley) and USD 384

Committee approves merger

CHRISSY VENDEL Collegian Reporter

The K-State, Kansas College of Technology merger took a step closer to completion Monday when the proposal was approved by the Senate Education Committee.

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said the proposal could face a potential hurdle, however, when it is considered by the Senate Ways and Means Committee Wednesday.

"It's going to be tough for the committee to agree to fund additional programs unless additional dollars are identified," she said. "The dollars haven't been found yet."

Oleen said it is disappointing that some people look at innovations on the basis of how much they cost rather than what they can do.

"This merger could really help the technical aspect that Kansas is missing," she said, "The recommendation of the Education Committee is a plus. and I think the Ways and Means Committee will have to focus on this. "I am pleased we were able to show the educational merit of the merger," she said.

Don Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, said he will attend the Wednesday meeting to explain the history and recent developments of the engineering technology program and cite the beneficial tradeoffs of the merger.

K-State will be absorbing some of KCT's administrative costs, and those funds can be used to support the faculty positions there," he said. "It's a no cost situation in that sense."

Other costs associated with the merger can be payed for by a sales tax hike the Salina community approved, Rathbone said.

Fort Riley Officials said Monday they still have not received word of when the 1st Division will be back, but they expect the Big Red One to bring up the rear.

'All we know is that sometime after a formal peace agreement is signed, the divisions will come back in the same order they went over," said Mark Meseke, public affairs officer. "The 1st Division was one of the last to go over. We expect them to be one of the last back." Last week, the Big Red One received orders from Central Command in Saudi Arabia to redeploy to Saudi Arabia. Earlier in the operation, the Department of the Army in Washington said that would be one of the first signs of the soldiers returning.

More than 175 soldiers returned last month and have been assigned to a divisional battalion to help the Department of Engineering and Housing with the shape-up of the base. Those soldiers are living in barracks that will eventually house the regular division soldiers.

There is a provisional or temporary battalion here that is helping prepare the base for the division's return," Meseke said. Soldiers and civil service workers are helping remodel barracks by doing electrical work, painting, plumbing and carpentry.

There have been rumors and worries, however, that the 1st Divsion may not return to Fort Riley, and possibly be assigned to Fort Hood, Texas. Meseke had no comment on those reports.

"There are rumors all the time," he said. "We are preparing for every soldier in the division to be coming back to Fort Riley."

In related news, a Kansas man who in action in the Persian Gulf War now is reported as killed.

Capt. William D. Grimm, 28, a member of the Air Force 16th Special Operations Squadron, based at Hulburt Field, Fla., was killed in action Jan. 31. He was on a AC-130H Spectre gunship that was shot down on a combat mission.

The 14 soldiers aboard the plane had been listed as missing in action until Friday, when the Department of Defense changed their status to killed in action, said Capt. Sylvia Freeman, an Air Force spokeswoman in Washington, D.C.

Grimm was a 1986 graduate of Kansas State University and a member of KSU's Air Force ROTC.

History repeats as Wefald sets teaching plans

Desire to be back in class prompts president's return

PAUL NOEL Staff Reporter

President Jon Wefald has once again announced his plans to return to the classroom and teach a course on "American History from 1945 to 1991: A Political and Diplomatic Account."

The class will meet Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at 8:30 a.m. Students do not have to be history majors to enroll.

Wefald annouced plans to teach history last year, but later retracted his statement, giving time constraints as the reason.

Wefald received his Ph.D. in history at the University of Michigan in 1965 and taught American History at Gustavus Adolphous College in St. Peter, Minn. The last time he taught was at Southwest State University in Marshall, Minn., 10 years ago.

Teaching is something he said he wanted to do for several

"I want to teach, and I love American history," Wefald said. "I read history all the time."

Donald Mrozek, head of the department of history, said President Wefald has kept in close contact with members of the department about new text books, and is frequently in attendance with the department's functions.

"He (Wefald) is no stranger to the members of our department," Mrozek said. "We are comfortable and grateful with his decision to teach this fall."

Although Wefald said teaching will add to his already busy work schedule, he said it will not take away from his duties as president.

"It will be a real challenge," he Wefald received his tenure professorship in the history department in July 1986, when he became an administrator, but has yet to teach a class. Mrozek said when an administrator is appointed, it is a common practice of the specific academic department to give tenure in which the administrator has his expertise. Wefald said the main reason he withdrew from teaching the class last fall was because he had too many speaking commitments for the Essential Edge Campaign. Time constraints can present an availability problem, he said. The decision to have the class will be made semester by semester.

"For several years," Wefald said, "the class may be a one-shot Mrozek said President Wefald has monitored his duties and responsibilities for the fall.

"He (Wefald) has been very careful to plan and make decisions so students can enroll in the class," Mrozek said.

The class will deal with the interplay in political and diplomatic events since the end of World War

"I think it will be an exciting class," Wefald said.

TIRANA, Albania (AP) - Communists claimed a convincing victory Monday in Albania's historic multiparty elections, but the opposition scored wins in all major cities and beat President Ramiz Alia in his parliamentary race.

The main opposition Democratic Party conceded it had garnered fewer than one-third of the seats in the legislature, but predicted the Communists would soon lose their grip on power anyway.

Sunday's election effectively ended one-party rule in Albania, which had been the last hard-line Communist holdout in Europe. Official results were not yet available. Transportation and communications are primitive in the impoverished Balkan nation.

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) - Gov. George Sinner vetoed what would have been the strictest anti-abortion bill in the nation Monday

"Such abuse must be resisted vigorously on both sides," Sinner said. "Government must not overstep its bounds. It must not play

Sinner was barred by the North Dakota Constitution from threatening a veto, although he said earlier the bill went too far. Under the legislation, rapes leading to pregnancy would have had to be reported within 21 days of the crime or within 15 days of when the victim was capable of doing so.

Finney threatens veto on school bill

TOPEKA (AP) - A school finance bill approved by the Senate passed its preliminary test in the House Monday, but Gov. Joan Finney threatened to veto it unless the Legislature provides more revenue to avoid a large property tax increase it would trigger.

Even before the House gave tentative approval to the measure, 68-55, Finney's press office distributed a statement quoting the governor as saying she would have to reject the bill if it reaches her desk without responsible financing.

Coupled with an appropriations bill that reduces general school aid by $14 million for 1991-92, the bill revising the formula, under which state money is distributed to local school districts, would create the potential for a $159 million property tax increase statewide next fall.

That is contingent upon all school districts increasing their budgets by the full amount allowed under the school finance bill.

Heller wins fellowship for 'God of the Shaft'

DAVID PRITCHARD

Collegian Reporter

Steve Heller, associate professor of English, has added another award to his list of achievements by winning the Kansas Artist Fellowship in Fiction.

Heller's selection "God of the Shaft" was selected by a panel of six judges and was chosen out of about 30 applicants for the $5,000 prize. Heller is in his 10th year at K-State and has been the director of creative writing for the last eight years. It was in grade school where Heller found out he had a gift for writing, he said.

"When I was a child, my teachers noticed in my book reports that I wouldn't just summarize the book. I would write the report in the style of the author of that book. Once my teachers saw that, they knew I was interested in language in the right way to become a writer," he said.

Heller has been writing seriously for about 15 years, but said he was not always so at ease with his work.

"I knew I wanted to be a writer but was too afraid of failing," he said. "It wasn't until I took a workshop under Gordon Weaver that I became serious about it. Now I write virtually ev-Heller has published 25-30 short stories and two books. The first book is a collection of short stories titled "The Man Who Drank 1,000 Beers," and the other book is a novel titled "The Automotive History of Lucky Kellerman.'

The character Lucky Kellerman is loosely based on Heller's father, he

In the book, "The Automotive History of Lucky Kellerman," Lucky locks himself in an old schoolhouse with a bunch of honeybees to rebuild a 1932 Model 18 Ford Roadster for his son, a disgraced former TV-game show host.

"Portions of this story are autobiographical. There really was an old schoolhouse that my father used for a workshop, and he really did share it with a bunch of bees," he said. "But he never locked himself up in it."

Heller's classes are based on workshop principle more than a teaching philosophy, said Wes Walden, graduate student in English.

"He takes the approach that you can't teach writing," Walden said. "He's a good guide, and his philosophy is just to sit down and write."

Writing is important because language is our basic tool for communication, and fiction and stories are how we explain the world to ourselves, Heller said.

"Anyone who takes a class from me must be interested in fiction that inspires the heart," he said. "By that I mean something that seeks to be as beautiful and true as it can be, regardless of who reads it."

Heller's work as a writer and teacher has earned him the respect and admiration of his students and

"Steve's work has a mixture of tenderness, humor and wildness,' said Elizabeth Dodd, assistant professor in creative writing. "He adds a touch of magical realism to his work by taking ordinary folks and turning them into not-so-ordinary folks."

Susan Jackson, K-State graduate and library assistant for the architectural library, was a former student of

"I graduated in 1987, and he still gives me support when I need it," Jackson said. "He's one of the best readers around and can pinpoint problem areas easily. He's very critical but very supportive. You need the criticism to be good, and you need the support to continue."

Heller is currently working on the third book in the Kellerman trilogy entitled "The Dreamland Tree."

Spring: time to get down, dirty

Garden soil needs preparation, test for organic matter

MARLA ROCKHOLD

Collegian Reporter

It is time again for people to get a little dirt under their fingernails and plant spring gardens.

Alan Ladd, Riley County horticulture agent, said because getting the soil ready and planting can take time, preparations need to be made immediately.

One of the first things to have done is a soil test. He said if this is not done every year, it at least needs to be done every two to three years. Bill Lamont, assistant professor in horticulture, agreed. "A soil test will determine the pH level (acidity) and amount of phosphorus, potassium, organic matter and nutrients in the soil," he said. Lamont said results from the test will determine if any fertilizer needs to be added, and if so, at what

If needed, he said, a broadcast or complete fertilizer can be applied before the garden is tilled. Only a third of the amount needed, however, should be applied to supply nutrients for the crop.

"Later on, they can come through and add more fertilizer or organic material," Lamont said.

The next step, he said, is to till the garden. After this is done, it is ready to be planted.

Lamont said vegetables needing to be planted in late March or early April are those that can grow in cool soil and may withstand a frost. He said these vegetables can be planted by either direct seed or transplant. "Direct seeds include peas, spinach, lettuce, beets, radishes, turnips and carrots," he said. "Those that come as transplants include broccoli, cabbage and cauliflower. Those are the three big ones."

Other early vegetables are potatoes and onions, he said. After planting, a starter solution high in phosphorus can be added to transplants, Lamont said. This gets the root development going," he said.

Ladd said transplants may also need some kind of protection from

"If they come from a greenhouse, they may be weak," he said.

Even after planting, a garden still requires much care, Lamont said. 'One of the most important things is to water the garden," he has been lately." As the plants grow, he said a side dress or fertilizer may be added at several different times.

said, "especially, with how dry it

Ladd said an important thing gardeners need to do is watch out for

"To prevent weeds and hold in moisture, they can mulch their garden with straw, old prairie hay, newspapers, old silage or a compost," he said. Lamont said periodic hoeing will also work to keep weeds down. Gardeners have to remain alert, Ladd said. "As they (plants) get further into the season people need to be on the lookout for pests," he said. "Bigger ones that we have a problem with are squash bugs, cutworms, grasshoppers and beetles, however, it's kind of specific to what plant you have.'

He said these pests can be controlled with insecticides.

After all these things are taken care of, Ladd said, all that is left is to let the vegetables grow.

Lamont said if planted now, the garden should be ready for harvest

Lawn care knowledge helps weed out unwanted plants

MELANIE SCHOENBECK

Collegian Reporter

Maintaining a nice lawn does not require a greenthumb, but it involves knowledge of lawn care

Dale Anderson, of Blooming Dale's Gardening Center, said September is the best time to seed a lawn because of fall rains and cool weather. March and April, however, are the next best choices. A successful lawn should be seeded as early as possible.

"The most popular thing right now is to put on crab grass pre-venter and a lawn food," he said. "You have to work fast because it is getting close to the right temperature."

seeds from sprouting and eliminates weed seeds in the lawn. At 54-degree soil temperatures, weeds will start sprouting. Therefore, the preventer must be applied before that time to keep the weeds from coming up, Anderson said.

Crab grass preventer keeps any

It is important to remember not to use the crab grass preventer and lawn food if you just overseeded a bare spot, said Dorothy Westervelt, of the Blueville Nursery.

People need to remember that grass seed needs water to germinate, she said. The use of straw helps keep new grass from washing

Apply a weed killer in about a month when weeds, such as broadleaf weeds and dandelions, are actively growing, Anderson said. If weed killer is not applied heavily enough, it can act as a fertilizer, and the problem becomes worse. Weed killers act as a growth stimulant that makes the plant grow so fast there is not enough of a root system to support the plant and it dies. Not enough will only make the plant grow better.

"In September after the summer stress and when the fall rains start, you apply the third application of fertilizer," he said.

Late in the fall, in November, the next application of a high-nitrogen content fertilizer should be added. In November, the grass has stopped growing because of the cold weather, and it will store the nitrogen energy in the roots of the grass.

That will keep the grass warm in the winter to prevent winter damage, Anderson said.

"In the spring when it warms up, the grass is up and green right away," he said. "Probably, the most important application is the November application. If you only have money for one application, do the November one.'

There are some new varieties of grass coming on the market that are dwarfs, Anderson said.

"I think people enjoy working on their lawns and gardens because it is therapy after a day of stress and work. You can work on your lawn or garden for half an hour, and it eliminates all the stress that has built up all day," Anderson said.

Lamb market hits low

ARLOAH FAIRCHILD

Collegian Reporter

The lamb market is at its lowest in

"Easter generally helps the market, but the market hasn't increased as much this year as in previous years," said Cillford Spaeth, associate professor of animal science.

"For a long time packers were in control and breeders didn't like it," Spaeth said, "but the packers fed increase in the amount of lamb avail-their own feeder lambs because it was good business sense.

"If the amount of lambs available went down, then the packers needed to be able to supply their packing plants with sheep to kill," Spaeth said, "I don't think this had much impact on the slaughter lamb market, but it has had an effect on the feeder lamb prices.

"I think what has really caused the market price to go down is the slight able," Spaeth said. "It seems like every time the sheep industry goes up in numbers, we get beat over the head.

"I don't believe it isn't possible to increase supply and keep market price if we keep our market share or our promotional efforts up," Spaeth

Spaeth said the peak lamb price was reached in May 1987 when the wholesale price was $1.74 per pound, hanging carcass weight. At that time, the average retailer price was $3.10 per pound.

"Now, although the wholesale price is only $1.08, the retailer price is $3.38 per pound," Spaeth said. "Retailers are saying people who eat lamb will eat it whatever the price," Spaeth said, "but with high retail price, we aren't gaining people. We need to decrease retail price to pick up the consumption of lamb.

"Lamb is a speciality item, not a staple food item. Certain ethnic groups might consume 25 pounds per capita, but the average capita consumption of lamb is 1.6 pounds per Spaeth said only one out of 16 people eat lamb at all. He said stores that promote lamb at certain times of the year are necessary to continue to carry lamb after the promotion is

"If lamb is given a fair shake, I think people will start eating it," he

Entertainment scene alive, so get out there

Greyhound bus that reeked of body odor, stale beer and certain chemical substances Nancy Reagan urges everyone to say no to - even musicians.

So who is Carrasco? Probably one of the best purveyors of Tex-Mex rock 'n' roll. He's been around now for 15 or so years, and in that time has probably logged more nights in motel rooms than hookers at a Shriner's convention in Las Vegas. Put simply, the man

His show at the Wareham Opera House was no exception. He and his band (The Crowns) came out and put on one of the best live shows I've ever seen. Carrasco was a madman. He ran through the crowd, dived off the stage and made sure the crowd and more importantly, himself, had a good time.

But there was a problem. It wasn't with Carrasco or the band. Despite a break that seemed a little long (remember the chemical substances?), they played until everyone was sweating. The problem wasn't with the crowd either. Though it took them a little while to get started, once they did, they oe "King" Carrasco came to town stopped only to get another beer.

It sounds like a good time, and it was. At least for the 50 or 60 people who bothered to show up. Therein lies the problem.

So, despite my desire to rock with the king, I couldn't shake the pissed-off feeling I had at the K-State community and the city of Manhattan as a whole. I've spent the last two years listening to people bitch about there not being anything to do and about having to go to Lawerence or Kansas City to see bands.

Hey, I'll admit Manhattan's not a cultural oasis. But if we don't take advantage of the few opportunities we do have, we're basically doomed to an entertainment scene that's going to consist primarily of watching soldiers from the 1st Infantry Division get in fights once they return from Saudi Arabia. Enjoyable as that may be, I feel we still need something more. Maybe someday, fraternity guys could get together and try to beat each other up for charity.

But I digress. I have to admit that one of the reasons the low attendance at the Carrasco show pissed me off so much was that I saw the same thing happen to local faves The Moving Van Goghs at their show last Wednesday. They also played a hell of a show to a

And before any of you elderly type faculty members get smug, take note that you're on my list also. It seems All Faiths Chapel was the host of a recital involving a very talented bassonist from some school in Nevada. From all accounts (I'll admit it, I didn't attend), it was an example of bassoon playing at its finest. Yet, once again; no one was there. What's the problem? I thought older people really got off

At the height of my anger, I grabbed a chair (there were plenty available), lit up a cigarette and proceeded to come up with reasons why no one was at the Wareham, why no one had been at Baystreet to see the Van Goghs play or why a bassonist at the chapel had to play primarily to himself.

The first thought that crossed my mind was that maybe people at K-State are scared of this thing called rock 'n' roll. Hey, I'll admit it, we here at K-State are simple people. We're not too sure about this new form of music with these distorted guitars, loud drums and lyrics about Satan and death. I sometimes find even myself longing for fiddles and clogging girls.

But that fails to explain the lack of attendance at the bassoon recital. How much more mellow can one get than bassoon music? Even Lawrence Welk (Mr. Bubbles) only used a bassoon occasionally, as he feared putting his audience to sleep.

Other thoughts also crossed my mind (mostly revolving around the idea of leaving K-State and going somewhere where people can appreciate music that doesn't involve spandex or boots), but Carrasco's tunes were calling me to the dance floor. I was at the point where I felt like dancing by myself and saying, "Screw everybody else." If, God forbid, I'm the only one who can appreciate talent and take advantage of opportunities presented to me, then I'm damn well going to do ey, being the generous guy I am, I even have a solution for those of you who weren't at any of the gigs last week, last year, 10 years ago and who don't plan on going to any in the forseeable future. Rather than sitting around in little groups bitching about the lack of activities and such, I'm prepared to give you guys something that will come in real handy.

Increased wages, prices offset, negate each other

Monday marked the day the minimum wage bill passed by Congress went into effect, raising the requisite salary for all American workers to $4.25 an

This increase is long overdue and could not have come at a better time, as the nation's economy is taking a downturn, and money is more vital than Employers must now reach deep into their pockets to pay their employees the increased wage. That reach is quite a stretch since the economic situation for employers is as discouraging as it is for employees.

To make matters worse, the employers are making up for their loss in income by increasing the price of their goods and services.

One culprit of this endless circle is the K-State Union.

Friday's Collegian headlined a story about the Union raising their prices due to the increase in the minimum wage.

If Manhattan area employeers must pay their employees more money and those businesses turn around and jack-up the price of their product, nobody makes any gains.

The Union must also pay its employees more money and so they, too, raise their prices. The result is students make a little more money than before, but we now must pay it all back in higher prices for our Willie mugs and chocolate-chip cookies.

The Union is a service to students and should benefit them with better or equal prices than they can get anywhere else in town.

The Union just received a line-item increase of $6.75 last Thursday, and that amount of money from each student should cover an increase in the minimum wage as well as their proposed improvements.

The Union should continue to offer the students, faculty and staff current benefits, and with the additional funding, the Union should not impose any cutbacks in those services or increase prices.

Supreme Court's latest decision reflective of equality tomorrow

Karin

Dell'Antonia

Collegian Columnist

wo weeks ago the Supreme Court made a monumental decision, and women took one more step on the seemingly endless road to equality. This almost makes up for what I considered to be a monumental blunder on the part of the court two years ago, when it waffled around for a few weeks and finally decided to leave the abortion decision up to the states. No matter how you feel about abortion, you have to question the reasoning behind that. It's waffling.

So what did they do? They decided women are human beings first, reproductive systems second. Not exactly a revelation to me, but it's nice to know the Supreme Court, at least, realizes we're something more than test tubes. It seemed to come as a surprise to Johnson Controls. What was the deal? Well, in a nutshell, the good jobs at the Johnson Controls (they make batteries) factory in Wisconsin — the ones with the good pay and the promotion opportunities — were going to men. Not because Johnson Controls bosses are a bunch of sexist pigs, but because these jobs involved working in an area of the factory where the conditions were hazardous to women's reproductive systems and fetus health. So the word from on high was, "No women in these jobs." Well, low and behold, a woman said, "I want that job. I need the money, and I've already had all the kids I'm going to have. You're discriminating.' Well, she said the magic "D" word companies hate to hear, so Johnson Controls said, "Okay, if you'll get a hysterectomy." Well, for obvious reasons, this didn't sound like a good idea to the woman in question. Pretty soon there were some other women saying things like "Unfair," "Forced mutilation of our bodies" and "In case you hadn't heard, Johnson Controls dudes, hysterectomies have some serious side effects that just aren't cool, unless we're talking life or death."

Pretty soon, somebody said the "L" word and Johnson Controls found itself with a lawsuit on its hands. (This is sort of the abridged Dr. Suess version of the story, which means I left out a lot of stuff and all the swear words. Forgive me if I made any serious boo-

Well, even I, avid feminist I am, have to feel a little sorry for Johnson Controls. They ended up with exactly what they'd been trying to avoid. They really couldn't win. Because if they had just gone ahead and started opening up the jobs to women, you know and know, and most importantly, they know, a lawsuit is exactly what they would have ended up with eventually. No matter how many papers and agreements there were, somebody would have gotten pregnant somewhere along the line. And even if Johnson Controls had tattood the words "I know that if I get pregnant there could be serious complications, I absolve Johnson Controls of any responsibility" on the her forehead, the woman and her deformed baby or whatever would still win the ensuing lawsuit.

Why? Because American juries are notorious for sticking the big, bad corporation with the blame when there's a child involved. Even if the woman accepted her stupidity, the child would not be bound by any agreements she'd signed and would, as soon as the child became 18, have one hell of a lawsuit on its own. So as you can see, Johnson Controls really couldn't win.

But the Supreme Court made the right decision anyway. It made, in my opinion, the only decision it could have made. Women are more than reproductive systems, and they cannot be discriminated against simply because they happen to have a reproductive system inside of them. If it hadn't been the better-paying job — a sure step on the road to promotion - maybe this wouldn't have happened. But it still would have been wrong. Women, as well as men, must be allowed to choose and take their own risks. The fact that their decisions may affect little unconceived lives cannot be taken into consideration. I'm willing to accept the concept of fetal rights, but egg rights is taking things way too far.

Asking that woman to have a hysterectomy before taking the job may have seemed like a reasonable precaution to the men in charge of Johnson Controls, (They must have been men. No one else would even think that might be a good idea.) but to ask a woman to have an operation that could result in depression, loss of sexual desire, hormonal changes and other medical complications just to get a job is ridiculous. Jobs do exist in the world that endanger men's reproductive systems (Although, because of basic biological differences, they are few and far between and usually result in only temporary impairment). You never hear of anyone suggesting that men chop their penises off for a job, did you?

I suspect the Supreme Court was really deciding in favor of a safe workplace for everyone. The long-term hope of everyone involved is that Johnson Controls, not wanting to run the constant risk of lawsuit, will make that part of its factory safe for both men and women to work in.

The real tragedy in this case is that working conditions probably won't become better. The probable result of all this hullabaloo will be that, as soon as it's practical, Johnson Controls will pick up its plant and move it right out of the country, to a place where equal rights and lawsuits are just bizarre American customs. Mexico springs to mind. Then nobody in that Wisconsin town, male or female, will have this job at all. Kinda sucks, doesn't

Still, the Supreme Court made the right decision and the only decision it could have omeday, a long, long time from now, equal rights will be a fact in every country for every woman. That's the direction this world is heading. Then Johnson Controls and everyone else will have to offer a safe working environment to men and women of every race, religion, sexual preference ... This is a small victory, really, in the face of a whole world, one full of discrimination, but it's still cool. There's hope for our country, at least, after all.

Jayhawks lose title game, but will return as winners

As the final buzzer sounded, Roy Williams' team left the court winners, not losers, never mind the score. The Jayhawks beat all those teams they weren't supposed to be beat and waltzed into the college basketball's final dance.

The Jayhawks made it to the final game of the NCAA championship, but lost to the Duke Blue Devils, 72-65.

Even basketball fans whose blood runs purple found themselves actually wanting the University of Kansas to beat Duke and bring the crown back to Kansas for the third time. Fans in Manhattan were jumping on the bandwagon, cheering on the team from down the interstate.

After all, the 'Hawks traveled the bumpy road to the final game - and making it to the final game makes all of the Big Eight teams look good. Watching the 'Hawks slam and jam made Kansans proud to be Kansans.

A win would have been great, but it was not meant to be. Duke was hot and KU trailed the Blue Devils the whole game. Throughout it all, the team never gave up and was always within a shot or two of the title. Roy's boys showed what it meant to play with heart, pride and class. Duke just outplayed the 'Hawks.

Both teams gave it their all and played hard. This is what college basketball is all about - someone has to lose and someone has to win.

Thanks to the 'Hawks. We are proud of you KU.

The Alpha Delta Pi sorority is cashing in on credit.

The ADPis recruited applicants for the Discover credit card as a fundraiser.

Each girl in the sorority had to have four people apply for the Discover card, said Kelly Bramble, sophomore in industrial engineering and philanthropy chairwoman for ADPi.

"If you get 400 applications turned in all together, you get a thousand dollars," Bramble

The company the ADPis worked with is called On-Campus Marketing, Bramble said.

"They sent us a flyer, and that's how we heard about it," Bramble said.

On-Campus Marketing was incorporated in 1982 and currently has 150 employees, said Jeff Burkhardt, account executive and public relations director for the company.

The company is involved in many areas including attitudinal surveys and media advertising, Burkhardt said.

"We recently did an attitudinal survey for USA Today over college students' reactions to the Persian Gulf crisis," Burkhardt said.

Burkhardt said the company advertises the fundraising projects to all of the colleges across the country.

The credit card company then pays the company a rate per each acceptable application.

The ADPis plan to use the money they raised to send their officers to the ADPi national convention in Florida this summer, Bramble said.

Committee looks to broaden theme

JIM STRUBER

Consumer Reporter

The 1991 Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week planning committee focused most of its meeting Monday afternoon on two issues - changing the name and theme of the committee.

First, the meeting opened with a brief presentation by Jack Hobbs, interim superintendent of Unified School District 383, on integrating the week's programming with the Manhattan public schools.

"We are going to work with K-State in any way possible to gain expertise in this," Hobbs said.

Afterwords, the discussion quickly centered on whether to change the name of the committee and revise the purpose to encompass cultural diversity.

Many committee members said changing the name and broadening the theme of the committee's goals would encourage more students, faculty and Manhattan residents to participate.

Phil Anderson, instructor of speech and co-facilitator of the committee, said the name of the week should accurately reflect the week's growing expansion of the celebration of diversity. He suggested keeping part of the old theme, but expanding the name to encompass more groups on campus and in the Manhattan community.

'As the week broadens, why doesn't the name broaden?" Anderson said. "The nature of the week is expanding. I am kind of in a turmoil. I would like to strengthen the roots." Stephen Moore, junior in philosophy and co-facilitator of the committee, agreed with Anderson. He said student participation from nontraditional students, residence halls and the greek system were essential for the success of the week.

"We must target more groups," Moore said. "I don't like the word 'racial.' It sets the tone. I think it is a negative type of word. We must stick with the meat and bones. I just don't want to turn people off."

However, some committee members were opposed to changing the focus of the week. They wanted to keep the old name and concentrate on more definitive subtitle and

Judy Davis, director of women's resource center, said the committee should be very careful the committee's purpose isn't turned into a diversity fair.

"We want to get people involved, but if the only way to get people involved is to pretend racism doesn't exist, that is wrong," Davis said.

"I am concerned about what the impetus for change is at this time," said Marlene Howell, instructor of women's studies. "I believe there is a lot of work to be done on diversity issues, but plenty of work remains to be done on race or ethnicity. We should concentrate on those two

"When there is an opportunity to dilute an issue, without being intentional, white people do it," she said.

Shawn Bogart, junior in accounting and union program council rep-resentative, said "racial/ethnic" may be too inclusive and people may hesitate to participate.

"Harmony is everyone, and diversity suggests what it tells you. It includes everyone," Bogart said. "To me harmony and diversity includes

Andy Cordero, director of the minority engineering program and 1990 committee co-chair, suggested the committee change the name to "Cultural Harmony Week."

Anderson said the committee should take a week and review the proposed name change. The committee will meet again at 3:30 p.m. April 8 in the K-State Union 208. They will make a final decision on whether to keep the old name or change the name to "Cultural Harmony Week."

Placement Center still receiving job openings

Coordinator suggests students need to search for summer employment, internship opportunities in advance

LISA NOLL

Collegian Reporter

Students who haven't found summer jobs yet should start looking. Carla Shull, summer employment coordinator for the Career Planning and Placement Center in Holton Hall, said she doesn't think it's too late to find a job for the summer, but students should start looking right

"We are still getting announcements about summer openings," Shull said, "but most are simple summer jobs like camp counselors."

Shull said in order to get a good internship for the summer, students had to start looking months in

The first step students should take if they haven't started looking yet is to decide what they want to do, Shull

Next, the students need to be willing to make as many contacts as possible both on and off campus.

The student's next step is to make at least a rough draft of a resume and begin working on it.

"Some students may have an advantage because many students are quitting (on campus) jobs to gear up for finals," Shull said.

The students would also have to be willing to start work right away and work during finals week, she said.

Shull recommends that students in future years begin looking for summer employment or internships as early as possible, even as soon as school starts in the fall.

Another option students may have is to seek out an employment consultant. Lorene Oppy, manager for the Employment Consultants in Manhattan, said it might be a little too early when it comes to thinking about summer employment. Employment Consultants help people find jobs and employers find employees by matching applications with job requirements, Oppy said. "Employers are thinking about it but may not hire until mid-April,"

Oppy said. Oppy said she encourages students to get a portfolio and a simple onepage resume together.

There are a variety of summer job opportunities in the Manhattan area including retail sales, construction work and cashier positions, Oppy

Duke holds off Kansas to win 1st NCAA title

SCOTT PASKE

Sports Reporter

It appeared Kansas was ready to launch one of those devastating second-half runs that left countless opponents staggering earlier this season.

The Jayhawks had shaved an eight-point halftime deficit in half with 16 minutes remaining. They weren't dominating, but they were making noise.

The scenario had a different twist, however, Monday. KU's flurries couldn't put the foe down for the

As a result, the Duke Blue Devils became the 1991 NCAA basketball champions, holding off Kansas 72-65 at the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis before a crowd of 47,100.

It was Duke's first national title in nine trips to the Final Four. The Blue Devils wiped a big egg off their faces after losing to UNLV 103-73 in last year's championship game.

Duke did plenty right in the game, shooting 56 percent from the field and hitting 20-of-28 free throws. The Blue Devils never trailed.

On the flip side, Kansas could never get over the hump because of an uncharacteristic demon - poor shooting. The Jayhawks hit 42 percent, missed nine layups and were 4-of-16 on shots inside 10 feet.

"I can't remember a time when we had so much trouble making easy shots," said Kansas center Mark Randall, who led the Jayhawks with 18 points and finished on the alltournament team.

Even when Kansas managed to get things going, Duke would smother the fire by forcing a turnover or making a 3-pointer. "Everything we tried to do in the game, they had an answer for," Kansas coach Roy Williams said.

Duke guards Bobby Hurley and After Kansas chopped Duke's seven-point first half lead to 26-25, Hurley nailed a shot from the top of the key. Three minutes later, McCaffrey put the Blue Devils' lead at 36-27 with a 20-footer from the wing.

Thomas Hill hit Duke's fifth threepointer of the opening half with two seconds remaining to give the Blue Devils a 42-34 lead at intermission.

Duke center Christian Laettner, the tournament's most valuable player, played a big role in the Blue Devils' success in the opening half, scoring 12 of his 18 points and hitting 10-of-10 free throws.

"Our two key guys throughout the season, Laettner and Hurley, came through for us again," Krzyzewski said. "And McCaffrey couldn't have picked a better night to play like he

After surrendering a couple of heartbreaking losses to the University of Oklahoma Sooners, the K-State baseball team hits the road again in hopes that more losses are not to follow.

The University of Northern Iowa, in Cedar Falls, Iowa, is a smaller school that offers the 'Cats a chance to get back on the winning track.

Netters to face Mizzou

TODD FERTIG Sports Reporter

Seeking its first victory since March 3, the tennis team travels today to Missouri, taking on a squad whose struggles may be greater off the court than on it.

A totally unfunded program, Missouri's tennis touad is handicapped from the outset. Without any scholarships or money for travel, the Tigers are the perennial doormat of the Big Eight

"They don't fund it to be competitive," Wildcar coach Steve Bietau said. "Most programs are forced to do some fundraising to supplement their budget, but they're forced to rely more heavily upon it." For that reason, Bietau said, Missouri can not recruit competitive players or afford to play in quality meets outside of the Big Eight. In taking on such a team, the Wildcats face some problems in preparation. A proper frame of mind is crucial for there to be a positive outcome in a matchup such as this, Bietau said.

"Everybody poses competi-tion for us," Bietau said, emphasizing the danger of taking an opponent lightly. "My concerns are entirely with our team. We've played consistently better with every match this spring. My concern is that we keep it going in the right direction. The players must continue to challenge themselves and to strive for improvement."

The Wildcats defeated Missouri 9-0 last season, a result Bietau said was typical of meetings between the two schools. Bietau acknowledged the tendency to lower the standard of play to match that of a weaker opponent.

"I think that can happen in a meet like this," Bietau said. "I want for us to play like we're capable of playing and not let who we're playing enter into the equation. We really need to take care of business in this meet."

The Wildcats opened Big Eight play Wednesday, losing 7-2 to Kansas. Michele Riniker lifted her record to 17-18 with a victory at No. 1 singles and teamed with Thresa Burcham for a win in No. 1 doubles.

Bietau said he found assurance of a positive performance today in the team's attitude in practice leading up to the meet.

"We talked about the Arizona State meet we played during spring break. We played hard and overall we played pretty well, but they just really stuck it to us," Bietau said recalling the team's 9-0 loss to No. 9 ranked ASU.

"There were matches where we would be losing 5-0, and yet they just wouldn't let up on us a bit," he said. "That really impressed the girls that they never let up even when the score wasn't close. We could have that kind of potential here (against Missouri)."

PORT ST. LUCIE, Fla. - Dwight Gooden vaulted to No. 2 on baseball's salary list Monday, agreeing to a three-year contract extension worth a guaranteed $15.45 million.

The average annual value of $5.15 million places Gooden just behind Boston's Roger Clemens, who will average $5,380,250 during a fouryear extension he agreed to Feb. 8. The two former Cy Young Award winners are the only players with contracts averaging $5 million a year

Student-athletes to be honored in ceremony

K-State will honor its student-athletes Thursday as part of the Fourth Annual National Student-Athlete Day. The event will be highlighted by a noon rally on the island between the K-State Union and Seaton Hall.

During the ceremony, a proclamation from Gov. Joan Finney will be read to declare April 6 as National Student-Athlete Day in Kansas.

According to Associate Athletic Director Veryl Switzer, the special day is designed to draw attention to the manner in which academics and athletics work together in education.

It was the Royals' fourth consecutive victory.

"One of the primary purposes of this activity is to encourage high school and middle school students to establish a balance between academics and athletic dreams they may have," Switzer said. "We hope this public recognition will encourage all-around achievements and serve as a catalyst to combat the problems confronting athletics and education."

Dolphins sign former Chief

MIAMI (AP) - The Miami Dolphins on Monday signed a veteran linebacker left unprotected by Kansas City before the deadline for signing Plan B free agents.

The Dolphins signed seven-year veteran linebacker Louis Cooper, 27, off the Chiefs' unprotected list. Cooper was Miami's fourth Plan B signing this year.

The Dolphins have lost seven players in the plan that allows teams to negotiate and sign unprotected players from other teams without compensating that team.

Also Monday, the Dolphins signed veteran linebacker John Grimsley, 29, from the Houston Oilers in exchange for the Dolphins' third-round draft choice in the 1991 draft and signed free agent tight end Charles Henry, a 26-year-old former Miami Hurricane.

The Dolphins, who have not been active on the Plan B market this year, were pleased with the addition of Cooper, who played college football at Western Carolina.

"Louis Cooper is a veteran outside linebacker who played a lot at Kansas City," said Director of Player Personnel Charley

Since the Plan B signing period began Feb. 1, Miami has signed linebacker Ned Bolcar from the Seattle Seahawks; tight end Eric Sievers from the New England Patriots; and defensive end Terry Price from the Chicago Bears.

Lecture to focus on dairy desserts, ice cream's future

ULRIKE DAUER

Collegian Reporter

With the first warm rays of the spring sun, Call Hall's ice cream counter becomes a favorite meeting place for students and faculty. Experts, however, are more likely to discuss ice cream rather than eat it.

The future for frozen dairy de-sserts is the topic of a speech David Smith, professor of food science and nutrition at the University of Minnesota at St. Paul, will give at 4 p.m. Tuesday in Call 205.

Smith, who received his doctoral in food science from the University of Wisconsin at Madison, will discuss the composition and physiochemical properties of frozen desserts, the quality of ice cream and talk about regulations on frozen

Smith is the fourth of six speakers at the Food Science Seminar Series 1990-1991, which the department of animal sciences and industry has for all students and faculty interested in food science.

"We want to present students a broader area so they have a better understanding and knowledge," said Harold Roberts, associate professor of animal sciences and industry.

Daniel Fung, professor of food science, said a committee including graduate students and faculty always suggests a topic and a speaker who is an expert in the field.

The series has been very fruitful since its beginning in 1980, Fung said.

He said between 30 and 70 people attend every seminar. Last year, a seminar on food labeling attracted about 100 people.

Roberts said he thinks not only students and faculty from animal sciences and industry will attend the seminar. Students and faculty from foods and nutrition and hotel and restaurant management will also be interested.

The Food Science Seminar Series is sponsored by K-State and six companies from the food industry.

Smith will also speak about "Better quality - the ever present goal" at the 25th Annual Kansas Dairy Industry Conference Wednesday at the Holiday Inn.

Other speakers will talk about aflatoxin residues in milk, milk composition and testing, microbiological problems and analysis of milk.

In addition, this year's recipient of the Outstanding Dairy Award 1991 will be honored at the conference, Roberts said, himself a recipient of the award in 1988

The award annually recognizes individuals for their outstanding contributions to dairy industry in

Roberts said last year's recipient, David Doperalski, received the award for improving dairy technology in Kansas. Doperalski, a graduate from the University of Wisconsin at Madison, also set up the Bit-o-gold cheese plant in Wamego.

The conference is sponsored by K-State in cooperation with Kansas Dairy Technology Society.

Guy Kiracofe, professor of animal sciences and industry, will become the department head of animal sciences at the University of Kentucky at Lexington July 1.

Kiracofe, a native Virginian, has been at K-State for the past 25 years.

"It was a tough decision to make, but it is a good opportunity to get into administration." Kiracofe said.

Kentucky has a similar program to K-State's, although it is about 20 percent smaller. Kiracofe will be working with 42 faculty, 300 undergraduates and 100 graduate students.

Jack Riley, head of the animal sciences department at K-State, said he had mixed emotions about Kiracofe's leaving.

"I haven't got his resignation yet,

"I support what Dr. Kiracofe is doing," he said. "He is highly capable of working with undergraduates, graduates and faculty, and there is no reason to doubt that he will be outstanding as an administrator.'

Bronski Beat characteristically new wave disco

REBECCA SACK

Collegian Reviewer

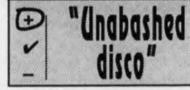

The 1980s are revisited in The Singles Collection 1984/1990 Featuring Jimmy Somerville, Bronski Beat and The Communards. This new release is a compilation of a few different sounds all stemming from new wave

The music of Bronski Beat on this album is most characteristically new wave disco, reminiscent at its best. Songs like "Smalltown Boy" and "Why?" are a comforting reminder of an entire genre of music that seems to have come and gone, or at least been adapted.

One of the Bronski Beat songs, "Ain't Necessarily So," has a more jazzy flavor mixed with some of the blues funk of the Stray Cats. Sommerville's individual contribution to this attempt at diversity is the one reggae song, "To Love Somebody." The reggae adds an interesting and welcome twist to this old song.

The other remake, "Never Can Say Goodbye," sounds a lot like Rick Astley. His influences may include the Communards. Their unabashed disco/broadway musical style has the guts of musak and the strength of Euro-disco dance music. If the Human League were to write a musical, the Communards would be the

Reviewer says ...

The rest of the songs have one thing in common, Jimmy Somerville. His vocals, light, high and airy, pervade the DOA back beat, bravely displaying Sommerville's talent.

Other interesting artists on the album include Marc Almond, Sarah Jane Morris, June Miles Kingston and Claudia Brucken. Almond and Somerville combine in a two-part song, "I Feel Love/Johnny Remem-ber Me." The tempo accelerates to Yaz speed until the song comes to an abrupt halt and begins a steady beat for the second half.

Brucken's song, "Comment Te Dire Adieu," contains the most provocative lyrics, since she sings them in French, but this song is missing the squeaking of Somerville's vocals.

If you have missed hearing the Bronski Beat, The Communards, or Jimmy Somerville, this album is your chance to pick them all up at their best. The best of the 80s is relived; the best of disco is gleaned from the 1970s and boldly displayed.

Small animal clinic joins organization to care for injured, homeless wildlife

HOPE SWARTZ

Collegian Reporter

The veterinary medicine small animal clinic and one area organization, Project Release, are gearing up for their busiest season of the year.

During the spring, people find injured or homeless small animals and birds and bring them to the clinic for treatment, said Brian Becker, freshman in engineering and Project Release volunteer.

The group gets hundreds of song birds, small rabbits and raccoons, which presents the problem of what to do with the animals after they are treated.

Project Release rehabilitates small wildlife so they can be returned to their natural habitat.

"So many of the wildlife are injured because of contact with man, such as gunshots," said Johna Veatch, associate professor in veterinary diagnosis and Project Release president. "Most of the time, they just fly into something man has made and break a wing or something. Once they are healed at the clinic, they can be turned over to us. We have a place south of town where we have flight cages, which are big structures where they can excerise and regain their strength."

The group currently leases the building. They rely on donations and fund-raising events to provide current services.

Veatch said the group is planning an auction for May 4 that is becoming an annual event. Last year, the group sold items donated by area merchants and artists.

Until recently, the organization was unable to afford flight cages for birds. Birds were exercised by tying a leather thong to their foot and allowing them to fly around for a period of time. Then, they

Birds and animals, such as Otis, are only allowed to be kept as educational animals if they are used a minimum of two times per month and meet stringent state and federal laws, Veatch said. Those who are not able to be released or placed with a local zoo are put to

Students searching for lease agreements need grasp of rights

JIM STRUBER Consumer Reporter

It's the time of year again when students are frantically searching for an apartment or house to lease, but experts encourage students to take their time and know their rights before signing a lease.

Cornell Mayfield, director of the Department of Human Resources, personnel and equal opportunity for the city of Manhattan, said the whole idea of renting is to be familiar with the Kansas Landlord Residential Landlord and Tenant Act.

He said his office provides information to both landlords and tenants. They are given a large packet of information containing information about their rights and obligations.

"Our job is to be neutral - provide information to landlord and tenant," Mayfield said. "It behooves the renter to know as much as possible about his rights and obligations, as well as the landlords' rights and obligations. This is why we include a lease that is flexible for the renter and landlord to negotiate with."

He said the Manhattan Human Relations Board and the Department of Human Resources held a fair housing workshop for owners, realtors, landlords, property managers, financial institutions and tenants on March 6 at the Manhattan Fire Department headquarters.

He said the workshop was attended by everyone listed with the exception of students.

"The only people who show up at the workshops are the landlords, realtors and property owners. We have workshops and seminars advertised in the Mercury and Collegian, plus there are posters put out all over town," Mayfield said. "We pay good money to get this stuff out. We advertise and advertise.

"Students are no different from when I was a student," he said. "They don't give a hoot about the realities of life until they experience it. They wait until they are up to their eyeballs in trouble. No preventative measures. They just sit and wait."

Mayfield said the lease is one of the most important documents a tenant signs. Many landlords include il-sage where Bateman is watching his maid clean up the gore from his latest victim. Ellis is merely extrapolating the nature of the people at the top of the economic ladder. Bateman is a re-legal clauses in the lease and some illegal clauses may be because the landlord is ignorant of the rights of the tenant or law.

Mayfield also cautioned tenants to avoid converted houses or apartments with only one electric meter. The landlord apportions a share of the electricity among the tenants, which can be unfair. He said renting a house may entitle the tenant to a few more obligations, such as lawn maintenance and repairs on the dwelling. In an apartment, the landlord has more responsibilities for maintenance.

Mayfield strongly urged each prospective renter to review the terms of the lease with members of his staff, an attorney or the Consumer Relations Board (located in the K-State Union).

"They come tipping in here after they signed the lease realizing, too late, they may have been too hasty, Mayfield said.

He also suggested that when you move into an apartment, the tenant has five days after occupancy to complete an inventory checklist, which is also included in the information packet.

"Do the inventory checklist and condition check of the apartment," Mayfield said. "If the landlord and tenant don't do it together, then do it by yourself and mail the landlord a copy.'

He said there is a process a person should go through if they have any problems. First, the tenant should get hold of the landlord. Then he should put any inquiry or complaint about the problem in writing. The landlord has 14 days to initiate action. After 14 days, the tenant can bring the letter to the code inspectors, and they will review the letter and go out and inspect the property.

"In most cases, they (code inspectors) will notify the landlord," Mayfield said. "That is why in the pink handbook, a sample letter is provided that the tenant should send that covers all the bases." Student tenants and landlords can

Past student first to serve on city council

LAURA BIRRELL

Collegian Reporter

If Craig Raborn wins a seat on the Manhattan City Commission today, he will become the second K-State student to serve.

Keith Bell served on the commission from 1971 to 1972 while he was working on his master's in community and regional planning.

Bell, who is now a co-owner of a consulting firm in Bolder, Colo., said he didn't know if his experience on the commission in the 1970s had any relevance to today.

"I think the students' contribution to the City Commission depends upon the student," he said. 'It doesn't make a difference whether you're a student or not, because your contribution depends on your experience and philosophy.

Vernon Deines, professor of planning, said Bell was in his 30s and had been out of school for about 10 years when he came back to work on his master's. This experience helped him on the commission.

"Bell wanted to change things in the Manhattan area," he said.

Robert Linder, professor of history and Manhattan mayor during Bell's term, said although Bell was a good commissioner, he was a special case.

"I don't think there was any problem in Bell being a student and on the commission," he said. 'Since he had worked for the city before, Bell really wasn't thought of as a student.

"I don't think it would be wise for a student on the City Commission to only represent the students."

Bruce McCallum, who served on the commission with Bell, said he didn't see why Bell's positive contribution to the commission couldn't be duplicated.

"A student can bring a different viewpoint and background to the commission," he said. "The commission likes to take an active role in representing the University and the student body of K-State, because many of the commissioners are graduates of K-State.

"The only thing different about a student commissioner would be age and background. I don't see any problem in having a student on the commission."

Residence halls expected to be full

95 percent occupancy rate predicted for next fall, housing department says

WADE RAMSEY Collegian Reporter

Despite rising prices and a slump in the number of graduating seniors this year, the residence halls are expected to be about full next fall.

"We're anticipating about 95 percent occupancy in the halls when we open in August," said Robert Burgess, assistant director for business operations for the Department of Housing and Dining Services.

The department has received less residence hall contracts than this time last year, Burgess said.

"The contracts turned in so far are largely from residents returning to the residence hall system," he said.

"We can anticipate the number of new students we will draw into the system pretty easily," he said. "K-State consistently gets a certain percentage of the graduating seniors."

The difficulty, Burgess said, is predicting the number of returning "Right now we're waiting on the returning students to turn in contracts," he said. "After they leave, we can pretty accurately predict how many new residents we will have."

Since the department is expecting fewer students to live in the residence halls next fall than this year, the department has set aside a handful of rooms in each hall to be single rooms. This should make up for any extra spcae in the halls, Burgess said.

"The number of graduating seniors in Kansas is going to be lower this year," he said. "There should be another bubble with a lot of seniors in the mid-1990s, but right now we have to prepare for a slight drop.'

The department is raising prices by 3.9% to compensate for rising food costs and the increase in minimum wage April 1, Burgess said.

"We anticipate the cost of food to go up between 3 and 5 percent next year," he said, "and we employ about 1,000 students. Those students' salaries are going up significantly. We have to offset those costs somehow."

The residence halls will cost $1,340 per semester, except for residents of Van Zile Hall. Costs for Van Zile residents will be $1,740 per

'The Van Zile increase is still just 3.9% more than this year; they just paid more in the first place," Burgess

Van Zile residents pay more because the hall differs from the other residence halls.

There are only 68 residents in Van Zile," Burgess said. "The halls are carpeted, there are private and semi-private rooms, and we use a point system on the applications to create an upper-class atmosphere."

The point system determines who is assigned to the hall based on academic class, past hall government experience and other related

"The perception I'm getting is that the residents really like living in Van Zile," Burgess said.

One Van Zile resident disagreed. "The atmosphere at Van Zile is great, I suppose. It is kind of an upper-class atmosphere. They just charge us way too much money for living there," said Cindy Munden, senior in electrical engineering and

"They made us so many promises about extra perks that never were delivered," Munden said. "We still don't have the convenience store they promised. For the first month or so we couldn't even eat there, and we still paid full price."

There are other things that Van Zile still lacks, she said.

We don't have the computers in the computer room hooked up to the mainframe," she said. "There's still no snack machines. We have to jump in our car and drive to Shop Quik for any snacks, because the doors to Boyd and Putnam are locked. We have only one door that works on the Validine system right now.'

Despite these drawbacks, Munden said many students in Van Zile are returning to the hall.

Ship replica to be donated

65-year-old glassblower to contribute Mayflower model

KEVIN CARROLL

Collegian Reporter

A spun-glass replica of the Pilgrims' ship, the Mayflower, will be donated to K-State by the 65-yearold glassblower Mitsugi Ohno.

The replica is 44 inches by 37 inches, and the sails, riggings and hull design are intricately detailed.

"I started the project in 1984," Ohno said, "but I had to set it aside for a while to complete some other projects. The entire ship took more than 500 hours of work to complete."

The Mayflower is a precursor to Ohno's next project, Columbus' three ships, the Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria. The ships will commemorate the 500th anniversary celebration of Columbus' trek across the Atlantic

"The Santa Maria will be the next ship to be built," Ohno said. "After the completion of all three of the ships in October 1992, they will be donated to the new art museum the University is planning to complete.'

Ohno is receiving international help for the completion of the Columbus project. A museum in Portugal is furnishing the remaining plans for the ships.

Ohno's collection of spun-glass replicas includes miniatures of Independence Hall, the U.S. Capitol, the USS Constitution and a 16th century Samurai castle in Himeji. Ohno's display in the K-State Union includes replicas of the White House, the Himeji castle, and Anderson and Cardwell Hall. Ohno said he presented the White Ohno said when he unrolled the blueprints on his work table, fire scorched some of the paper, which made it difficult to determine the colors for the flag on the front mast.

"My friends in the history department could not tell me what the colors were on the flag," Ohno said. "We had to call the Plymouth Plantation in Massachusetts to find out that it should be a red cross on a white

As a teen-age boy, Ohno worked as an apprentice glass blower at his uncle's shop located in Tokyo.

During World War II, American B-52's leveled the shop during a raid on the Japanese capital. The raid also took his uncle's life.

"I had finished 6 years of my 10-year apprenticeship with my uncle when he died," Ohno said. But it was enough training to prepare him for 50 years of work as a master glass blower whose creations have been recognized by four U.S. presidents.

Kylee Schultz, director of the consumer relations board and senior in consumer affairs, said that the CRB office workers listen to more than 60 landlord-tenant inquiries and complaints in the early spring and late fall. Landlords and tenants come into the office for information and advice about their particular problem.

Schultz said when fall approaches, the CRB office resolves many landlord-tenant disputes focused on late security deposits or unfair deductions from security deposits.

She said the CRB office advises tenants and landlords on the rights the law gives them. They try to explain the law and apply it to each client's particular situation.

For example, the CRB office will review letters and notices written to the landlords from the tenant if the apartment or housing unit is substandard and in violation of safety or health codes.

This service is also provided to the landlord if the tenant is abusing the rights of the landlord or surrounding neighbors and destroys the landlord's property. The office will also help them both with the procedure of filing in small claims court.

Schultz said the CRB office workers will also read through and review the lease with tenants to make sure they understand every part of it. They will inform the landlord if the lease contains any illegal clauses. The tenant has the right to cross out any clauses in the lease that are illegal or disagreeable to the tenant.

Make sure the lease is legal, and don't sign the lease until you understand the lease," Schultz said.

She also said when living with roommates, one must know them very well so they don't disagree or fight with each other.

"We listen to a lot of roommate problems," Schultz said. "Most of the time, people need someone to lis-

Driving cab enjoyable for teacher

LORIE BYSEL

Collegian Reporter

Driving strangers around in a car every day may not be something that appeals to everyone, but for some it's an enjoyable way to make a living.

Larry Sullivan, Manhattan, has been a taxi driver for Bell Taxi Trans Inc. for three years and said he enjoys what he is doing.

Besides being a taxi driver, he is also a teacher at the Manhattan Christian College and a minister in Wakefield.

"I decided to become a cab driver because the only requirement was that you needed to know how to drive a car," Sullivan said.

"I really needed the money because I had been put back to part-time at the college." Sullivan said the first thing he does in the morning is write down his odometer mileage. When he picks up someone, he pulls the lever down on the meter so that he and the customer can keep track of the

"On a good day, I haul 25 or more people around, on a bad day, anywhere from 12 to 15." he said.

"I usually drive about 100 miles Helen Mixon, dispatcher for Bell

Taxi, said like anything else, mileage fluctuates day to day. "On the weekends, we usually get 20 some calls," Mixon said.

"Our busiest time is in the morning when people are trying to get to

"We also have our regular pickups that we do at the same time every day," she said.

Manhattan offers coupons to senior citizens and handicapped persons. They can ride anywhere in Manhattan for one coupon, she

The coupons are given based on the income these people can make. Bell Taxi offers its own coupon system for individuals who make more money than the city's coupons limit.

Bell Taxi also offers a wake-up service that calls people at the time they request every morning if they

The cab drivers get a 60-40 commission every day they work, Sullivan said. "We turn in 60 percent of what we take in for the day, then we take 30 percent home and the other 10 percent is used for our taxes," he said. "If there's any left, we get it back. "We encourage getting tips, but some people, no matter how nice you are to them, will never leave you anything. A lot of older people usually only leave 25 or 50 cents," he said. The busiest time of the month is at the beginning. People get their pay checks, so they have money to spend, Sullivan said.

Bell Taxi also provides a pick-up service for the board of education when they have disobedient or hard to control students.

"We take them to and from school," Mixon said.

"We look out for our people," Mixon said. "That's why we won't hire women to work at night — for safety factors.'

Taxi drivers have to be careful of the people they pick-up and beware of everything that is going on around them.

"We had a driver get stabbed about 50 times from a customer who needed a ride to Fort Riley about three or four years ago," Mixon

Sullivan said he never felt he was on the verge of being stabbed, but he has had several interesting experiences.

Sullivan said one time a drunken man got into his cab and snatched the two-way radio out of his hands. He started cussing into the microphone at the dispatcher. Sullivan said he ended up taking the man to the police station and dropping him

Once in a while, people do try and get away without paying.

Sometimes if the driver gets a good look at the person who tries to leave without paying, they can call the police. The police are usually able find the person and make them pay, Sullivan said.

The cost to get in a taxi in Manhattan is $1.40, and $1 is charged for every mile driven.

Student Senate increases fee, SGA funding Misinformation buys time

ANDREW CAPPS

Collegian Reporter In the spirit of Easter, the Student Senate resurrected an activity fee increase thought to be dead last Friday. Although not on the agenda for Tuesday's meeting, the Senate Finance Committee introduced a student activity fee increase of an additional $1.95 for full-time students and 17 cents for part-time students starting next fall. The increase passed 45 in favor to 5 opposed. With the passage of the proposal, all groups scheduled for review and allocation increases will be postponed until the Student Finance Committee can come up with new budget projections. The Senate was to start considering allocations at its meeting Tuesday.

The Student Activity fee funds many student organizations and services available to students. It has not been increased since 1979-80.

The fee is being raised from $6.05 to $8 for full-time students and $3.83 to $4 for part-time students. It will allow Senate to allocate an additional $63,332.90 each year.

This, according to Senate Finance Committee, will allow for flexibility and change in the funded organizations to better serve students.

Last week, a bill increasing the activity fee by $1.95 was rejected by the Senate. Set aside in last week's fee increase was $1.80 specifically for the Student Governing Association budget.

Part of the SGA budget would have been used to hire a full-time receptionist, give raises to the SGA leadership and refurbish the SGA offices in the K-State Union.

Under the proposed fee increase, SGA can now go before Senate and request additional funding - but will be treated like any group funded by Senate.

At last week's meeting, senators were led to believe the SGA proposal needed to be to the Kansas Board of Regents in Topeka by 10 a.m. March

In fact, the proposal needed to be on the desk of the Vice President for Administration and Finance by 10 a.m. March 29.

Because of an extension, Senate may deliver the proposal to the regents Wednesday morning.

Many senators expressed concern and asked the Finance Committee's opinion of what could happen if SGA came before Senate again.

"If I were to decide for the committee, I would consider giving SGA a receptionist. I wouldn't give what they requested for salaries, but there would possibly be an increase there," said Craig Uhrich, chairman for the Student Finance Committee.

Uhrich said he would not want to guess a dollar amount SGA could receive.

Graduate Senator Joel Gruenke amended the bill to reduce the $1.95 proposal to 95 cents and the 17 cents proposal to 7 cents, which was rejected after debate.

"There has been no suggestion, evidence or argument that there needs to be a $63,000 increase," Gruenke said.

"Before we can debate on if we should pass this much of a fee, we need time to decide if we need it."

Despite the plea by the sponsors of the bill that it is not the same bill read last week, Gruenke said he needs to research information on the bill.

Uhrich said it is not the same bill that was read last week and asked how much research would be done with an extra week.

"It all boils down to how well we want to fund the groups," he asked.

"All we are doing is putting more money into the pot to better serve the students," said Tricia Thornton, business senator.

A senator asked Gruenke if he had a dollar amount that would be generated with his amended proposal.

Gruenke said he could not come up with a dollar amount on a spur-ofthe-moment piece of legislature.

As it stands now, students will pay the proposed amount to be allocated by the Student Senate.

All groups waiting for their budgets to be allocated for next year will have to wait until the finance committee can come up with a new projected budget. Senate said the groups will only be postponed one meeting. Senate is meeting every Tuesday and Thursday for the next few weeks.

Senate also passed the budget request for Legal Services. Legal Services will receive $31,648.88 to be budgeted for 1991-92. This is a $889.88 increase from last year.

Every 10 years, K-State is put up on the block and reviewed by a regional accreditation agency on its capabilities to meet accreditation standards.

It's K-State's time to be on the block again. The University, as a whole, will be reviewed for reaccreditation by the North Central Association, a regional accreditation agency that covers 19 states from Arizona to West Virginia.

Bob Kruh, vice provost, said accreditation is important, not only to the University itself, but also to the "Whether or not a university is an accredited school affects students' access to federal financial aid, like Pell Grants," Kruh said. "It can also have implications in the job market and can enter into the picture when students apply for graduate programs at other institutions.

Kruh said the accreditation review is a long process that isn't expected to be completed until about September of the 1992-93 academic year. But the process has begun, Kruh said. President Jon Wefald recently appointed an all-University steering committee to plan for K-State's review, with Don Hoyt, assistant provost for planning and evaluation services; Linda Richter, political science professor; and Kruh serving as organizers.

Kruh said the committee will prepare a self-study - the first step of the review process - to submit to the NCA. "The main thrust of our self-study report will be President Wefald's strategic planning material," Kruh said. "We'll be using that quite a bit." While the University is preparing the self-study, the agency will assign a team of 8-10 consultant evaluators to conduct the review and evaluate K-State.

The reviewers will be from different institutions outside Kansas.

The agency will send a list of the evaluators they've chosen to evaluate K-State to the University. K-State administration then has the opportunity to voice any objections it might have to any of the choices, and can list counter-suggestions. "The evaluators' objective is to make an analysis and recommendations on ways K-State can improve," Kruh said. "It's really a very functional approach to improving and maintaining institution standards."

Kruh said the evaluators, after having read the self-study submitted by K-State, have three and a half days on campus to conduct the review. During this time, they will talk to faculty members, classified personnel and students in the various colleges and departments. Kruh said this part of the process probably won't happen until the 1992 spring semester.

The K-State debate team won the 1990-91 national title by defeating the University of California, Los Angeles Monday.

The team won in the final round of the national Cross Examination Debate Association tournament and finished the 90-minute face-off as the No. 1 college debate team in America.

Amassing 179 tournament points, K-State's team broke the record for the most points scored and was the first university ever to field six teams in the elimination rounds.

Susan Stanfield, instructor of speech and debate coach, took 14 students, forming seven teams, to the national tournament that began Friday in Bellingham, Wash. Other topranked universities at the competition were Cornell, Oregon, Vanderbilt, Air Force and Arizona State.

About 200 teams were entered. The team of Rich McCollum, junior in speech, and David Filippi, senior in speech, entered the final debate round with UCLA late Monday

Afghan government concedes defeat

ISLAMBAD, Pakistan (AP) - Conceding its first major defeat in two years, the Afghan government observed a day of mourning Tuesday for soldiers killed in the capture of a town by Muslim guerrillas.

Afghan President Najibullah said government troops lost the southern town of Khost after 17 days of fierce fighting.
"God bless the martyred of Khost," Najibullah said in a speech broadcast Monday on state radio. He declared Tuesday a national day of mourning in Afghanistan.

Khost, 18 miles from Pakistan, was the first significant military victory for the guerrillas since the Soviets withdrew the last of their 115,000 troops in February 1989. Moscow continues to provide weapons and other aid to the Kabul government.

It was the first battle of the so-called "spring fighting season" guerrillas hope will pressure Najibullah to negotiate a settlement to the conflict that began with the April 1978 coup that installed a Marxist government in Kabul.

Diplomatic and guerrilla sources said as many as a third of the 6,000 government troops in Khost were captured and 1,000 more reportedly surrendered. Others apparently escaped, they said.

Authorities break up narcotics ring

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) - Colombian and Venezuelan authorities have broken up a major narcotics ring with ties to the region's cocaine cartels, police said Monday.

Bogota's police chief, Col. Luis Felipe Montenegro, said security forces in recent days arrested 10 leaders of the ring, which allegedly smuggled cocaine into the United States and the Caribbean for the past decade. Montenegro's announcement came a day after police seized and destroyed 15,200 pounds of cocaine belonging to the ring, which maintained close contact with Colombia's Medellin and Cali cocaine cartels, authorities said.

The drugs were found Sunday in the city of Monteria, about 310 miles north of Bogota, a police report said.

House fails to override veto

BISMARCK (AP) - North Dakota's House of Representatives failed Tuesday to override the governor's veto of what would have been the nation's strictest state abortion law.

The House voted 63-43 to override the veto, eight short of the 71 needed.

Gov. George Sinner, a father of 10 and a Roman Catholic who once considered the priesthood, vetoed the bill Monday less than two hours after he received a formal copy of it. His veto message said government must not play God.

The bill would have banned abortions except in cases of rape, incest or when a woman's life was in danger. A woman would have to report the rape to police within 21 days, or within 15 days after she became capable of making a report.

It provided for a maximum penalty of one year in jail and a $1,000 fine for anyone who performed an illegal abortion.

Fort Riley's Department of Engineering and Housing is anticipating some members of the 1st Infantry Division's 937th Engineering Group to return from Saudi Arabia sometime about April 15.

"It's all word-of-mouth," said Col. Steven Whitfield, director of DEH. "But we are unofficially anticipating the 937th to return around that time. Fort Riley public affairs officials said they had no information on that "I don't know anything about that," said Mark Meseke, public affairs officer. "It sounds like somebody's spouse is giving a good guess.'

Members of the 937th left before the 1st Division was redeployed to Saudi Arabia, Meseke said. He said those members of the 937th who participated in Desert Shield total about 650 troops.

"The entire group did not leave Fort Riley," Meseke said. "Some of it stayed here."

Officials with the Department of the Army at the Pentagon said in a phone interview Tuesday that they had no information on the return of any Fort Riley troops in the near

"We receive no word of any troops coming back until two days before they are due back in the States," said Lt. Col. Gary Wenzlaff, Army spokesman. "It could be that it's in the works. It could be that someone called his wife and said that he's coming back. But I have no information on 1st Division troops."

Despite lack of conformation of that report, the DEH has its workers, both regular Civil Service and temporary hires, working overtime getting the base in order for the entire Division's return. Civilian employees have been putting in 10-hour days, seven days a week.

"For the past three weeks, we have been making a concerted effort to get the base in tip-top shape," Whitfield

But Whitfield said the onset of Desert Shield brought about a special Desert Shield budget, which frees his hands of the previous restrictions.

"Essentially there is no cap on the Desert Shield budget as long as it's spent prudently," he said. "It was given to us when the 1st Division was deployed to be spent on anything as long as it's attributed to Desert Shield."

Rats participating in scientific experiments in space will be eating food bars made here at K-

Becky Dibben, senior research chemist for the American Institute of Baking, is the project coordinator in developing and producing rodent food bars for NASA.

Dibben said NASA contacted AIB more than four and a half years ago to develop the product.

"The food bar must be hard enough to keep the rat's teeth sharp, yet not be crumbly. This is extremely important because of the lack of gravity in space," Dib-

The process of producing the bars is extremely specific. The bars come out of a twin-screw extruder at 200 degrees, a temperature Dibben says is crucial.

"If the extruder is too cold, the bar will split down the middle, and be too small," she said. "If it is too hot, it will expand with air

To be accepted for use on the shuttle, the bars are milled to precise dimensions. The acceptable variance is only three-tenths of an

Another possible problem in producing the bars involves moisture content. The bars must all have 26 percent moisture. Dibben had to complete moisture tests for specified distances to ensure this standard was being met. Due to the high moisture, the bars are refrigerated to prevent mold growth.

"If the bars aren't cold, they turn green - real green," Dibben

Although the parameters the food bars must meet are many, the formulation is rather simple.

"It has wheat gluten, com syrup and vitamins and minerals. Not too unlike the cereal we eat," Dib-

The Grain Science Club was asked to provide labor for the project. Members worked shifts moving trays for $4 an hour, which will go into the club treasury.

Appearance, purpose dictate hero choices

t's amazing how appearances sometimes take over purpose in our choosing of our role models. I'm thinking of my friend, Peter, who recently posed an interesting example of this phenomenon.

I went by Peter's room for something the other day. When I knocked there was a sound from inside the room, nothing comprehensible, just the disinterested grunt you might hear from a man who was preoccupied with something besides a knock at his door. I knocked again, and when the same sound came a second time, I went on in. Peter was sitting cross-legged on his bed, reading a comic book that lie in his lap. Several posters hung on the wall behind him. On each was a picture of a comic book superhero, his name underneath: Captain America, The Punisher, Wolverine.

Peter didn't look up when I entered. About a half-dozen comic books were lying before him arranged carelessly on the bedspread. It was clear he'd been to the comic book shop earlier in the day.

It was nothing new with Peter; he reads comic books like some people watch soap operas. I say he "reads," but I think he likes the pictures, mostly. It's something Peter enjoys, and there could be worse role models than Peter's super heroes, I suppose. After all, we all have our own expressions of hero worship.

Peter's happens to manifest itself in his comic book collection.

"Hi, Pete," I said.

"Uh," Peter grunted, still not looking up. I had forgotten what I had come into Peter's room for, so I walked over and glanced down at the book he was reading. Hesitantly, knowing that it may lead to something difficult for me to get away from, I asked, "Whatcha readin' there, Pete?"

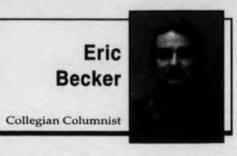

Peter perked up then and turned the book a bit so I could look at the page he'd been reading. "Wolverine," he said, responding with the name of the super hero whose face filled the page, "He's my favorite."

I knew Peter's favorite was whichever he happened to be reading about at the time, but I studied the picture of Wolverine with as much interest as I could muster.

Wolverine wore a blue and yellow costume. The top of his face was hidden by his mask. He was scowling like a hardened bigcity cop, a bent cigarette dangling from his mouth.

"Look at the way he smokes that ci-garette," Peter said excitedly, "That's baaaad," he drew out the "a" in the word so I knew he meant it was good. Peter thought the way Wolverine smoked that bent cigarette was cool.

"Is Wolverine a good guy or a bad guy?" I asked, noticing a full-body shot of the same man on the facing page. The presence of cruel-looking, Freddy Krueger-like claws on the gloves of Wolverine's costume was what made me wonder.

"Wolverine's a good guy!" Peter insisted, not too politely. It was apparently a stupid question to a guy like Peter who knew the

"I see," I said doubtfully, taking a last look at the claws. "Well, enjoy it," I said, turning around and going out the door.

When I pulled the door shut, it closed harder than I meant for it to. I flinched a little at the sound of it, but I jumped at the noise that followed.

There was a crash from inside the room. It horrified me. I figured that I'd shaken something loose from the wall when I slammed the door, and something had fallen and broken on the tile floor. I threw the door back open and

But it wasn't what I thought. Peter was on his back on the floor, up on his elbows a bit like a man blown back by the explosion of a bomb. It didn't take me long to see what the source of the sound had been.

The wall beside Peter's bed had been split open. The Wolverine poster hung in shreds, cut through by what looked like the slash of a monstrous claw.

There was a scream like the sound of the wind blowing down all of the chimney's of hell. Then the wall burst forth as a muscled man leaped through the wall, scattering plaster around Peter on the floor. The man landed on his feet inside the room.

It was Wolverine! He wore the same blue and yellow costume he'd worn in the comic book. He had the same bent cigarette hanging down over his hard, angry jaw.

I was amazed. But Peter didn't seem surprised, only excited. "Did I tell you?" he yelled to me in the doorway. "Look at him! Look at the way he smokes that cigarette!"

"You think too much of me, kid," Wolverine warned, his narrow eyes on Peter. But Peter seemed not to hear. He was on his feet, and in a leap, he stood at his desk and began to rummage through the drawer.

Peter took a pack of cigarettes out of the desk. He pulled one out of the pack and began to bend it clumsily in his fingers. I saw he was tearing the paper of the cigarette while trying to make it look like Wolverine's.

"What's this?" Wolverine asked, pointing at Peter. "You tryin' to be like me, kid?" Smoke drifted off of the end of his cigarette in a jagged arc. "Kid," Wolverine continued, "take my advice and give it up. Fightin' crime is not as comic book as you think. Bein' like me might get you killed. ...

olverine stopped cold and bent his knees a bit like an animal about to spring. He sniffed the air instinctively and seemed to smell something that wasn't quite right.

I looked at Peter. He hadn't heard a word Wolverine said. He was too hard at work on the cigarette in his fingers.

"There's danger," Wolverine concluded, "Close." Then he disappeared through the hole he'd put in the wall on his way in.
"There!" Peter said proudly, sticking the mangled but successfully bent cigarette into his mouth. It was only then Peter noticed his hero had gone.

"Man," Peter said, the cigarette coming apart as it bounced in his mouth. "Not everybody gets a real look at Wolverine!" Appearance and purpose must be considered as at least equal components in our evaluations of our heroes, whoever they may be.

Proposed drinking bill won't solve problems

Drinking and then driving is a trivial change from the curstupid.

Very few rational people can argue with this simple statement.

Yet, many of us know people - relatives, friends, associates - who drink and drive. Admit it folks, you have probably even had a few drinks, gotten in the car and started to drive.

Heck, we all know people who have driven drunk and DIED. Kapoot ... forever. Drunken driving has the terrible potential of: 1) killing the driver, 2) killing the passenger(s), and 3) killing anybody unfortunate enough to be in the path of a car under the control of a drunken driver.

Many state legislatures are flirting with the idea of zero tolerance or a compromise that will lower the current bloodalcohol percentage neccessary to be considered driving under the influence.

Last week, the Kansas Senate approved a bill that would lower the legal limit of bloodalcohol percentage from .10 to .08 percent.

This bill is now being reviewed by the Kansas House, and the chances of the bill being passed are excellent. Just ask your state legislators.

However, the bill represents rent .10 percent requirement. For example, under the new requirement, a 180-pound person would be legally drunk in an hour by consuming four and a half beers, instead of 5 beers. Six ounces of brew separates a person from being legally intoxicated.

Instead of dropping the limit, the state should work to enforce the current laws. To those laws, legislators should add stiffer penalties for driving under the influence.

For example, stiffer penalties with no exceptions could include $1,000 fines plus all the court costs, one-year suspensionsof driver's licenses, extensive community service and alcohol education programs and MANDATORY jail time (at least 24 hours in the cooler).

These measures would be an effective determent, especially after your relatives, friends, associates and yourself read about it or were actually dumb enough to be drinking and driving.

If stricter penalties are enacted and the law is adequately enforced, there is no reason to change the current law. Just obey the current law. Don't drink and drive.

Guilt, no regret

Editor,

I would like to turn myself in. I am guilty of removing the pro-life posters that Matthew Vajnar has been accusing the Voices for Choice group of doing.

I am not a member, officially, of that group, although I support them completely. I remove such vile propaganda in the same spirit in which I would gladly destroy Klan propaganda. Vajnar's group should be shown for what they are, an insidious group of fascists, lacking compassion and unable to imagine the kind of fear a woman experiences when faced with the uncertainty of birth control, pregnancy and the fickleness of her biology. People should know that most pro-lifers like Vajnar advocate the complete abolishment of abortion and birth control. Joseph Scheidler of the Pro-Life Action League has been quoted as saying, "(we) oppose all forms of contraception." Meanwhile, we "girls" (as Vajnar calls us) will continue to fight, any way we can, for our basic rights as human beings.

If Vajnar is so concerned about kids, why doesn't he put his money were his mouth is, pull his motivation out of women's pants and volunteer at a day care.

Examination needed in gulf 'triumph'

Hardly anyone would bother to deny that after the defeat in Vietnam, there was an urgent need for an event like the "triumph" in the Persian Gulf War to reassure America's power, to stand proud and make Americans feel good about themselves and to make them feel like "saviors" of the world.

Now it is time to pause and deeply examine America's conscience. It is time to remind Americans that no nation has the right to establish its welfare on the misfortune of another nation. A nation that sustains freedom by killing tens of thousands of people in one place and empowers repression in another, cannot be the savior of the world, but its ultimate tradegy.

Congratulations

Congratulations, Student Publications Inc. My applause goes to Ron Johnson, Linda Puntney, Gloria Freeland, Tomari Quinn and everyone else who contributed to Student Publications' well-debated Senate allocation.

From this point on, my concerns are many. don't doubt that with the $3.90 full time/$1.95 part-time student increase the Royal Purple and the Collegian will be able to produce a better quality and more efficient yearbook and newspaper.

My concern does not lie on the readability or accessibility of the Collegian, but rather on its contents. However, I would like to congratulate the staff for its fine coverage on Native American Heritage Month activities.

I currently subscribe to the Kansas City Star due to its interesting news features, for its great coverage on city highlights, its focus on the metropolitan area as well as its fine reporting on the communities' interests and concerns. I grab the Collegian everyday in hopes of being satisfied in the same way. Sometimes I receive a wide array of news coverage, sometimes I don't. Why the inconsistency?

I understand the staff spends a great amount of time interviewing, proofreading, doing ad copy and layout, as well as trying to keep on top of studies. Thanks for the time commitment, but use your loyalty towards producing a newspaper the students, the Manhattan community and K-State alumni want to read.

Alas, you will no longer complain of your 12-year-old equipment and threaten us with statistics and facts. As long as the Collegian is up to par on production and circulation, we hope the contents are just as rewarding. I'm sure you would get a great response if you provided a Collegian suggestion box, or perhaps you could begin working with the journalism instructors on receiving the story ideas that the News and Feature Writing students hand in for credit.

There's a lot of diverse things going on outside of the Kedzie Hall newsroom, its just a matter of getting out there and printing them. Good luck in your efforts on "our" Student Publications.

Perceptions prove deeply troubling

Scott Fowler's account of how the Los Angeles Police brutality incident has affected local police departments was very timely. The reflections of Lt. Dana Kyle of the Riley County Police Department on how citizens have perceived this incident are especially noteworthy. In fact, Kyle's reflections might provide some insight to problems such as police brutality.

His comment that, "Everyone thinks police officers are something above the average human," illustrates that he wrongly perceives how many, as citizens, perceive him. Kyle also suggests that before the LAPD incident, citizens didn't think police might brutally assault someone. It is unfortunate Kyle is incorrect about the perceptions of many citizens. Both comments represent an obvious projection of Kyle's perceptions of the citizens he interacts with daily.

For those who do not accept the perceptions forced on them by Kyle, it is quite alarming that this police officer sees himself as something other than a normal human being. Moreover, it is deeply troubling that he supposes many citizens have never thought about police brutality.

Order is not factor in resurrection story

I am writing in response to Brad Seabourn's last column.

The biblical account of the resurrection does not have any contradictory evidence to sufficiently destroy its credibility. All four gospels have the resurrection event recorded. All four gospels say Mary Magdalene was the first to reach the tomb. All four gospels say the stone was rolled away. All four gospels say Mary Magdalene told the disciples of the

But Seabourn challenges the chronological order of the evidence. Why is that so important? Chronology does not disclaim the event because the event is recorded in the five places suggested by Seabourn to read (five different books). The importance of the resurrection is not that the gospels match exact chronological order, but that they all have the same evidence. The importance is Christ is event. All four gospels say Jesus appeared to

Local police good

Over the past two weeks, we have continually heard negative commments throughout the media in regards to police brutality. The unprofessionalism and lack of proper conduct of the officers in the Rodney King beating have given a black eye to police officers nationwide.

I heard reports again today of a group of Topeka police officers who are being sued for brutally beating an individual last March.

I work as a mobile intensive care technician at the Riley County Emergency Medical Service. Although not a police officer, I spend a great deal of my time working in close contact with them. My immediate contact is with the Riley County Police Department, the KSU Police and the Pottawatomie County Sheriff's Department.

I work with these departments several times daily. I would like to assure the public that the officers who serve on these three departments are highly professional, both onand off-duty. We are very lucky to have the quality of officers that we do. I would also like to thank the Manhattan Mercury and the Collegian for their continuous professional reports in regards to this issue.

International students must get permit to work

Application process has some restrictions

Collegian Reporter

There are more than 1,000 international students from 95 countries at K-State, 776 are graduate students and 250 are undergraduates.

International students who are in the United States on an F-1 visa are not eligible to work off campus unless they obtain a work permit.

An F-1 visa allows students to remain in the United States for the amount of time normally needed to complete their specific academic program, said Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center.

The visa also provides a grace period of up to 18 months, depending on the normal length of the program in case more time is needed.

During this time, the students have to be continuously enrolled in the fall and spring semesters. Undergraduates must be taking 12 hours, and graduates students who do not have an assistantship must be taking nine

To obtain a work permit, F-1 students must apply in person to the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Kansas City, Davis said.

They have to have been in the United States for one calendar year, she said, and have a need for employment on the basis of an unforeseen change in their financial situation.

International students with F-1 visas cannot work more than 20 hours a week during school.

She said about three-fourths of the F-1 sudents at K-State are graduate students, and many of them have assistantships.

Not as many students apply for off-campus work permits as one might think, she said.

Marcia Schuley, assistant director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, said the Immigration Reform and Control Act states that intending citizens-aliens who are permanent or temporary residents, admitted as refugees or granted asylum, are protected from employment discrimination.

According to a list of questions by an attorney for the College Placement Council Inc. that were answered by the U.S. Department of Justice, F-1 students are not classified as intending citizens.

Because of this, they are not protected by the IRCA from employment discrimination. Employers who refuse to interview students with F-1 visas do not violate the IRCA, Schuley said. Some F-1 students who have been in the country for nine months apply for pre-completion practical training, which must be related to the student's area of study, Davis said. This kind of employment can be done in the summer, when course work has been completed but research has not or if it is an option or requirement for the degree. They can also apply for postcompletion practical training, she said, which lasts for one year and takes place after a degree is completed.

Some students hope to work for a year and then be sponsored by a company for an H-1 visa, which allows a person to remain in the United States for an additional five years, Schuley

To obtain an H-1, however, the sponsoring company must show there are not any other qualified peo-ple in that person's field.

She said companies are often reluctant to sponsor students because the student is not obligated to remain with the company that sponsors him or her, and some companies have been hurt when the student leaves.

Also, it costs more than $6,000 to train a new college graduate, she said, so the company barely recoups the cost in the first year of employment.

Students need to start early in trying to find employment, she said, and not be dependent on on-campus interviews, but instead, use networks to find other ways to get a foot in the

King houses chemicals in solid form with high boiling points

ERIN BURKE

Collegian Reporter

Organic solvents and low boiling points are terms that mean little to most people, but have every-thing to do with chemical storage.

King Hall is where chemicals used by graduate students are stored, said Dale Hawley, profes-sor in chemistry. The 300 different chemicals don't require special storage because they are solids with high boiling points.

"It's set up almost like a supermarket," Hawley said.

Chemicals are set up in alphabetical order and are also cataloged by the computer, Hawley

Arlon Meek, chemistry storekeeper, said every time a student uses a chemical, they must look up the Material Safety Data Sheet. This sheet is sent with every chemical purchase. It informs the user of how the chemical should be handled, what makes up the chemical, precautions to be used, how to extinguish a fire, first-aid applications and acute side effects.

Flammable materials and chemicals with low boiling points are kept in the chemical storage building beside King.

"The walls in this building probably have more steel than concrete," Hawley said.

Reinforcement is necessary because volatile chemicals are stored there, Hawley said. Skylights are put in the storage rooms in case an explosion would occur. The force of the explosion would go up, creating less damage than if it went

A walk-in refrigerator is kept in the building at 8 degrees Celsius, Hawley said. It is important that chemicals with low boiling points are refrigerated so reactions don't Hawley said there has never been a fire or explosion in the chemistry department.

Used chemicals are also placed in the storage building Hawley said. They are kept there until a chemical recycling company purchases them.

Necessary precautions are taken when anyone deals with chemicals, Hawley said. Students wear safety gear, such as goggles and gloves. Students working with chemicals that give off harmful gases are required to work under hoods, which circulate air and suck up fumes.

A specially designed vent system is used throughout King to circulate air in all the laboratories, Hawley said. Every ten minutes air is completely recirculated.

Faculty members are constantly checking laboratories to insure safety requirements are being met.

Royals are back to cure basketball withdrawal

Well, write off 1990-91 college basketball and March Madness.

As much as any sports fan dreads being without CBS Gameday, Raycom basketball or Big Monday on ESPN, it is over, not to return until November.

However, it was an exciting season with its ups and downs for the Big Eight. But now that it is over, what are sports fans going to do? Thank God, only less than a week away to rescue us is the opening day of Major League Baseball.

Yup, it is time to put on the ballcaps, head to the ballpark, buy some peanuts and cracker jacks and root for the home team. But, most of all: pray that the Oakland A's will have an off year, and the Kansas City Royals will rebound from their last-place American League West finish.

If the Royals could put everything together, they could actually have a decent year, but the AL West will be tough with Oakland and the Chicago White Sox.

Kansas City Manager John Wathan has nearly cut the team down to the final 25 players who will be on the roster come next Monday for its home opener against Cleveland.

The Royals have fared quite well in exhibition baseball in Florida en route to building a 12-11 record and stand sixth place in the 14-team American League standings.

Six of the starters are batting above .330 with Kevin Seitzer and George Brett leading the way at .396 and .383, respectively.

Brian McRae has also been holding his own with a .342 average and the most hits of anyone on the roster. Danny Tartabull and Kirk Gibson have added some power to the lineup. Tartabull hit a three-run homer in Monday's win over St. Louis, and Gibson has nailed two round-trippers this week.

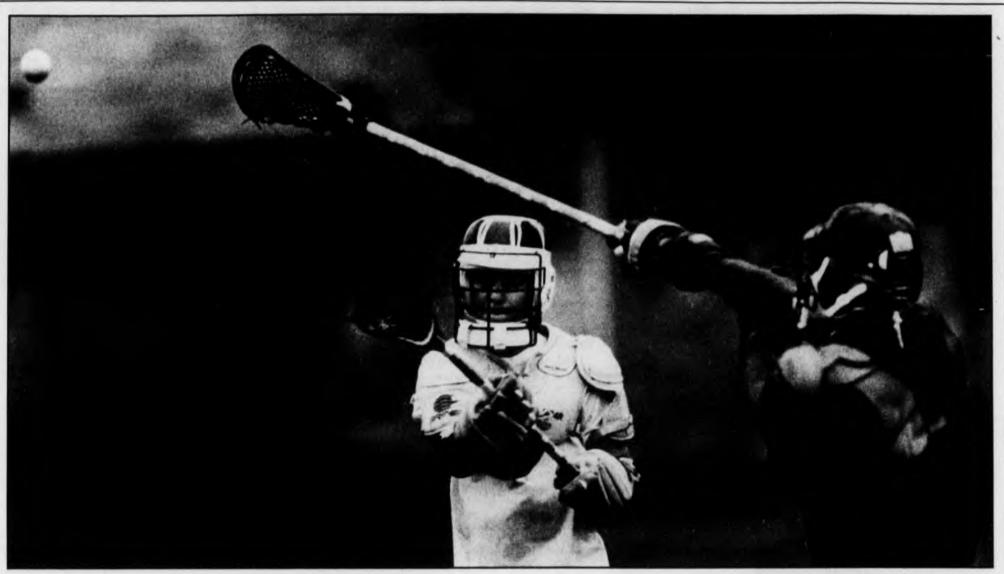

The batting lineup, though, will have to be without Bo Jackson, who was lost to a tragic hip injury. That leaves an opening in left field that more than likely will be shared between Jim Eisenreich and Gary Thurman. As it appears now, Eisenreich has the edge, hitting .378 to Thurman's .211 average.

On the pitching staff, Mark Gubicza was placed on the disabled list, and as a result, will not be in the starting rotation. Wathan is going to have a four-man starting rotation that includes Bret Saberhagen, Storm Davis, Kevin Appier and Mike Boddicker.

Tom "Flash" Gordon will get to move back to middle reliever. Other middle relievers will be Luis Aquino, Steve Crawford and Dan Schatzeder. Aquino has yielded only two earned runs in 13 innings, and Crawford has a 0.90 earned run average over 10 innings.

The two closers will remain the same as last year's squad with Mark Davis and Jeff Montgomery rounding out the pitching staff.

So, all you diehard Americans who love America's greatest pasttime, get ready for a season as exciting and as full of madness as the college basketball season.

Athletic brothers share mutual respect

Hmielewskis help 'Cats in two sports

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

In spite of his accomplishments on the baseball field, Chris Hmielewski still looks up to his football-playing little brother.

Rarely does an older brother look up to a younger one. Surprisingly, It is not admiration for Jim Hmielewski's accomplishments, nor is it respect for Jim's character and easy-going nature that causes Chris to look up to his brother.

While Chris holds these things in high regard, it is simply Jim's 6-foot-7, 285-pound stature that causes the older Hmielewski to look up to his younger brother. At 6-foot-4, the pitcher/first baseman who is leading the Wildcats in hitting doesn't give up inches to many people. But at 215 pounds, Chris is unable to explain his brother's bulk. 'We don't know where Jimmy got his size," Chris said. "I used to be big Hmielewski, but now I'm little Hmielewski."

Height is common in the athletes' family, but both brothers agreed the difference in weight creates grounds for a brotherly rivalry marked by frequent kidding and an occasional wrestling match.

"I get on him a lot about being skinny," Jim said. "He always wants to gain weight, and I keep telling him he's always going to weigh a buck-ofive."

A junior, Chris was joined at K-State this year by his brother, who is a redshirt freshman offensive lineman. Both brothers said they feel fortunate to be able to attend school together again.

Competing in different sports at the same school is a tradition for the Hmielewski brothers. They came to K-State from Franklin Park, Ill., where they starred in sports at Leyden High School. Growing up, it was the younger brother who looked up to the older one with admiration.

Two years older than Jim, Chris earned all-conference honors in football, basketball and baseball and was recognized as one of the top amateur baseball players in the state.

"Seeing him do well makes me more proud than when I accomplish something myself," Jim said. "He's inspiring to me, and when things are tough he makes me want to keep going. When I see him do well, it makes me want to do something, too"

At first, Jim followed in the footsteps of his three-sport star brother. Jim soon discovered, however, that football was the sport he enjoyed

"Because I played all three sports, I think Jim was expected to play all three, too," Chris said. "Mom would tell me that Jim wasn't having fun with baseball and basketball, and I told him 'If you don't want to play the other sports, just concentrate on what you want to do."

Neither brother said he felt pushed by their parents or by each other. But when Chris decided to leave Franklin Park to play baseball at K-State, Jim came into his own on the gridiron, developing into an all-state offensive lineman.

"He won't tell you that I put pressure on him, but I think he felt a little school. Last season Chris hit .284 pressure to be successful," Chris said. "When I left he really came into his own, but it wasn't like he resented the pressure. He'd still be the first to call me and tell me how he was doing."

As a football recruit a year ago, Jim visited K-State, but planned to visit several major football programs before deciding on a school. While visiting K-State, Jim unexpectedly, announced his decision to forgo the other trips and commit to the Wildcats.

The opportunity to be close to his brother helped Jim decide on K-State. Both brothers agree that having been apart for two years helps them appreciate each other more. Being able to watch each other compete in sports at the same school is an opportunity for which both are grateful.

"Having Jim here is just a real joy," Chris said. "To get to watch him play, to see him all the time, it gives you a sense of family and makes this seem a little more like home."

Upon attending K-State, Jim found himself in a similar situation as the one he encountered in high and tied for the team lead with seven home runs, and showed potential on the mound.

Jim quickly points out that he doesn't feel any pressure or jealousy from watching his brother succeed. Jim attends every baseball game he can to support his brother.

"As we've grown up and matured our relationship has changed," Jim said. "We'd always be criticizing each other and expecting more out of each other than we should. But now we don't get on each other, we just support each other.'

Jim actually enjoys the attention that having a brother in a different sport attracts. He said the football and baseball teams have begun to support each other more than in the

"When I'm up in the stands watching him and its an important time in the game, everyone is looking at me like 'He's got to do it.' It makes me nervous for him," Jim said. "But it's been fun. I know all the baseball players, and he knows the football players. It's brought a lot of the guys together."

Cats smash Panthers again

Northern Iowa pitchers have probably had enough of K-State for one season

The Wildcats rebounded from a frustrating Big Eight Conference series at Oklahoma in which they lost three of four games to crush the Panthers 18-2 Tuesday at Cedar Falls, Iowa.

K-State, which improved its record to 20-14, roughed up Northern Iowa hurlers for the second time in less than four weeks. The 'Cats pounded out 20 hits for the game and received stellar offensive performances from three junior infielders.

Shortstop Craig Wilson led the attack with a 4-for-5 outing, including two home runs and five RBI. First baseman Chris Hmielewski tied a school record with three doubles, as K-State finished with six for the game.

Catcher Jeff Ryan had two hits to vault his hitting streak to 16 consecutive games. K-State's school record is 25 games, set by Otto Kaifes in 1987.

Righthander Dan Driskill was the winning pitcher, allowing only one hit in five innings of work. Driskill, 4-2, faced the minimum of 15 batters.

In the two games against North-ern Iowa this season, K-State combined for 32 runs and 38 hits. The 'Cats dropped the Panthers 14-5 March 7 in Manhattan.

Fans treat Jayhawks like heroes in defeat

By the Associated Press

LAWRENCE - The last time the Kansas basketball team assembled at the 50-yard line in Memorial Stadium, it was to celebrate a national championship.

Then the bad news hit - one, two,

First, coach Larry Brown left. Then All-American center Danny Manning graduated and Kansas was put on NCAA probation for recruiting violations.

Tuesday, it was hard to believe that just three years later, the Jayhawks were back in the stadium with a second-place trophy from this year's Final Four.

But not for the 12,000 to 15,000 faithful fans who filled one side of the stadium, cheering and chanting for the team, just returned from Indianapolis via Topeka.

"I have been in a lot of places to watch basketball, to coach basketball," said Coach Roy Williams, who repeatedly was interrupted by chants of "Roy! Roy! Roy!" from the crowd.

"This is the best place to play basketball, and your showing today does nothing but signify how far ahead of everybody else we are. This is the best place for college basketball," he said.

The outpouring of affection for Williams was just like that for Brown in 1988, when Chancellor Gene Budig made a public appeal for Brown to stay. Soon, however, Brown left to coach the San Antonio Spurs.

"The last time you had a celebration like this, you had a coach leave you," Williams said. "I'd like to be here for a few more of these, so if you don't mind, I'd like to stay."

Smiling broadly in the background was Athletic Director Bob Frederick, who was roundly criticized for hiring an assistant coach to replace Brown, even if the assistant was a longtime Dean Smith protege.

"I'd like to thank Bob Frederick for hiring me," Williams said with a laugh. "I'd like to have a few more of these, if he doesn't fire me.

'Seriously, I told the team last night in the locker room that I have never felt the hurt that I felt for them. but I have never been so proud of a group of players," Williams said. "If I coach another 30 years, I will never feel as proud for a group of players." The Jayhawks defied expectations by reaching the final game of the Final Four, but then went cold. Duke won the championship Monday night 72-65. The disappointment wore off quickly. After landing in Topeka, the team was greeted by about 300 fans, including Budig, Gov. Joan Finney, and U.S. Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-sign in the Lawrence crowd read: "Jayhawks - Number One In Our Hearts."

"I feel like it's my duty to support the team, even if it's a loss. I think they deserve to have 100,000 people here," said Bellevue, Neb., junior Todd Parker.

Shooting Star crash lands at Snookie's

Comeback album, tour opener short on originality, excitement

Collegian Reviewer

Shooting Star has been falling for years now, and they crash landed at Snookie's bar in Aggieville Tuesday

The fairly large-sized crowd anticipated a middle-of-the-road rock show from these washed-up inbreds and that's exactly what they got.

These native Kansans almost gave it up in 1989 with a last-ditch effort, "The Best of Shooting Star." The only new song on the album, "Touch Me Tonight," was an unexpected hit. Now with a prettier lead vocalist and a formula-driven comeback album, they start off their tour in Manhattan.

Opening with an ominous keyboard introduction, the band members looked nervous as they took the stage. But soon, they were all smiles when the rock-starved audience began to sing along with their trite

In fact, at least half of their tunes contained predictable pauses allowing audience participation. Although I'm not extremely familiar with Shooting Star's material, I was able to sing almost the exact words with the band as they were singing them.

Shooting Star's meaningless lyrics make sense only in the fact that they rhyme. Song titles such as "Break Out," "Bring It On," "Blame It On the Night" and "Rebel With a Cause," however, actually spurn one to think - think, "Are there any cliches they haven't covered?" One song included the stunning revelation, "If you play with fire/it's gonna burn!"

As the concert progressed, the band's confidence grew. It seemed as though the performers' grins were due more to the crowd's adoration than the fact that they enjoyed what they were playing.

There were even several love ballads with the formula keyboard introduction that they played "for the ladies." Shooting Star possessed enough bland formula to fill a thousand baby bottles.

Opening band Shyboy, from Hays, never broke a string or a sweat. Their stage presence during the songs could only be described as catatonic.

Switching vocal and guitar duties, the front man suddenly became a shy boy himself. He strapped on a guitar and pretended to play while talking to the keyboard player, who, in turn, disappeared entirely before the end of the set.

Between songs (apparently not hindered by instruments) they came alive with stale stage banter like, "Are you ready to kick ass with Shooting Star?" They even managed to turn Pink Floyd's classic "Another Brick in the Wall Pt. 2" into a cheesy lounge sing-along.

"This song made it to No. 1 in the Z-Rock Top-50," the main vocalist said before breaking into Queensryche's Pink Floyd rip-off "Silent

Maybe someday, if they stick with it long enough, Shyboy could attain the same kind of drivelous notoriety that Shooting Star has achieved.

Students get experience in exercise field

VICKI KNIGHT

Collegian Reporter

Many exercise science students are learning, right here in Manhattan, if the corporate fitness industry is the career path for them.

K-State's Center for Exercise Research has developed programs that not only offer fitness services to the community but also give students interested in the exercise field valuable experience, said Ed Acevedo, director of the center.

One of the programs the center offers, in conjunction with the Kansas Farm Bureau Insurance Co., is the Wellness Program.

The program is designed for the fitness needs of the employees of Farm Bureau and for K-State students to get the experience of running a fitness program in the corporate arena, Acevedo said.

The program involves fitness testing, evaluation and implementation of exercise programs for employees.

Acevedo said fitness testing includes cardiovascular, blood pressure and heart rate testing. All three are the most signifigant factors for cardiovascular disease, which is one of the most costly health care problems for corporations today.

Fitness and wellness programs in corporate settings are becoming more and more popular. According to a survey done by the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, 31 percent of national companies with more than 100 employees now provide exercise programs, 90 percent of which are underwritten by those companies.

Acevedo said such programs exist because there is so much evidence suggesting healthy employees are more productive employees. They cost less for health care costs, they miss less days of work and like work more.

Acevedo said the program with Farm Bureau was set up when news got out that Farm Bureau was interested in started up a fitness program.

After consulting Farm Bureau on how to set up an exercise program and realizing the benefits of working together, the two groups combined efforts for the program.

Lori Lorenzen, senior in exercise science, said it has been a good opportunity for her to be a part of the program, working with employees needs and learning how to administer fitness tests.

Lorenzen said when talking with the employees about how the exercises affect job performance, people say they've had selfesteem improvements, their motivation has increased and their stress level has decreased.

This summer, the program will be evaluated to the cost effectiveness of the program, Acevedo

Government secrets increase due to war

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The government last year created some 6.8 million secrets, roughly the same number as the previous year, but that doesn't take into account the effects of the Gulf War, said a report released Tuesday.

Nevertheless, President Bush wrote a letter accompanying the report to praise the government for keeping military secrets during the war while providing for an informed public.

But when the numbers for 1991 are compiled next year, they will more tham likely show a marked increase in the number of secrets because of Operation Desert Shield.

The security oversight office estimates the government pro-duced 6,797,720 secrets during the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30.

That's an increase of just 1,219 secrets over the previous year.

The security oversight office estimates the government pro-duced 6,797,720 secrets during the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30. That's an increase of just 1,219 secrets over the previous year.

The government doesn't actually sit around counting its secrets, though. Those numbers are estimates derived statistically from samples examined by the military services and other executive department agencies.

Overall, the number of times the government uses the "confidential," "secret," and "top secret" stamps has fallen since the Reagan administration left office.

In 1985 the number of government secrets was estimated at 15 million, according to the security oversight office report.

Smoking banned in city buildings Ordinance does not provide for designated smoking areas

An ordinance banning smoking in city-owned buildings was passed by the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday night.

At the March 19 commission meeting, the ordinance was tabled so that a workable definition of the word "building" could be established.

The previous definition was any covered structure permanently fixed to the ground.

Under the new ordinance, which will go into effect July 1, a building is 'any covered, enclosed structure built for support, shelter or enclosure of persons, animals, chattels or moveable property of any kind, and which is permanently affixed to

An amendment to establish designated smoking areas rather than ban smoking completely in city-owned buildings was proposed by Commissioner David Fiser. The commission, however, would not second the motion to include the amendment.

'The reason (the smoking issue) is before us now is because we had problems with the designated areas," Commissioner Rich Seidler said.

Fiser said he had reservations about the total ban from an enforcement

Italian film wins at Academy Awards

ERIC MELIN Collegian Reporter

It's hard to imagine anyone not liking this traditionally entertaining motion picture. The style of "Cinema Paradiso" evokes memories of the early days of film, when the stars were Humphrey Bogart, Charlie Chaplin and Greta Garbo, among others. It just so happens the story revolves around those movies and their power.

Set mostly in post-World War II Italy, the screenplay, written by director Guiseppe Tornatore, explores classic themes.

Toto, played magnificently by young Salvatore Cascio, has a favorite pastime when he's not attending grade school. He loves to go to the local theater and watch Alfredo, the projectionist. Using the money his mother gave him for milk, Toto watches the movies and strikes up a friendship with Alfredo.

Eventually, Alfredo shows Toto the mysteries of the booth. A projectionist since he was 10, Alfredo explains why the magic of the flickering images keep him there. The audiences are held captive by the figures up on the screen, and Alfredo feels partly responsible for the laughter and the tears he sees every day.

Toto eventually takes over the job, and he and Alfredo's friendship lasts throughout his school days and military service. Alfredo quickly takes the place of Toto's father, who died in the war. When Toto falls in love, his life seems to parallel the films he adores so much, but his old friend is quick to point out the difference between movies and real life.

"Cinema Paradiso" follows the tradition of the films from the 1940s and 1950s. At once, it can be incredibly funny, heartwarming and moving. But at the same time, it seems to have many conflicting messages.

Alfredo disapproves of nostalgia. He tells Toto, who later goes by the more grown-up name Salvatore, that he must move on.

Although the little village of Giancaldo is a dead-end street as far as his future is concerned, the script drowns the viewer with sentimentality.

After showing the way movies have progressed, both technically and in content, Tornatore makes one yearn for the old simplicity of the early days. At the same time, that is exactly what he delivers. These contrasting ideas make up the one thing that he captures most beautifully and brilliantly - real life.

Tornatore explores the parallels between the magic of movies and the magic of love. His film is universal. It could also serve as a crash-course history lesson in the classics, as many familiar actors and actresses appear onscreen, delighting the crowds all

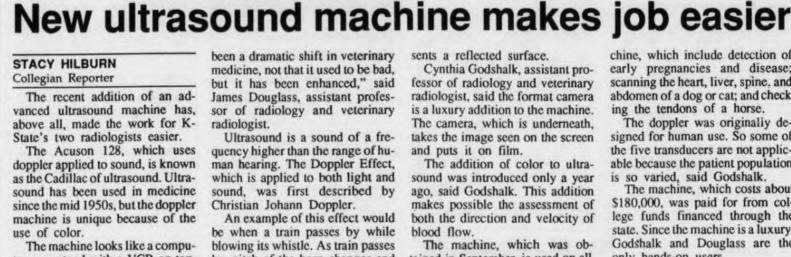

The only thing keeping mainstream audiences away from "Cinema Paradiso" is the fact that it's an Italian film. But don't let this disturb you. The story is easily comprehensible, and it is subtitled, allowing for the original soundtrack. Winner of the Best Foreign Language Film at the 1989 Golden Globe and Academy awards, it deserves to be seen as widely as any "E.T." or Cynthia Godshalk, assistant professor of radiology and veterinary radiologist, said the format camera is a luxury addition to the machine. The camera, which is underneath, takes the image seen on the screen and puts it on film.

The addition of color to ultrasound was introduced only a year ago, said Godshalk. This addition makes possible the assessment of both the direction and velocity of blood flow.

The machine, which was obtained in September, is used on all animals, especially dogs and horses. Godshalk said there is an average of five clinical cases every day that use the equipment.

There are many uses for the machine, which include detection of early pregnancies and disease; scanning the heart, liver, spine, and abdomen of a dog or cat; and checking the tendons of a horse.

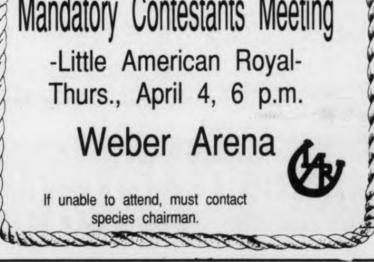

MIKE WELCHHANS/Staff

The doppler was originally designed for human use. So some of the five transducers are not applicable because the patient population is so varied, said Godshalk.

The machine, which costs about $180,000, was paid for from college funds financed through the state. Since the machine is a luxury, Godshalk and Douglass are the only hands-on users.

"Not only has it made work easier, but it is a lot of fun to work with. Prior to the machine, hearts couldn't be imaged adequately," Godshalk said.

Veterinary medicine students and faculty will soon have space to work on emergency cases without having to work around intensive care equipment.

"The old ICU is being separated into two rooms," said Dave Bruyette, assistant professor of clinical sciences. "One room is for emergency patients and the other for the intensive care patients. This will provide more room to work on and care for the animals.

The examination tables will have access to oxygen, anesthesia, and respirators for the small animals such as dogs and cats," he said.

991 ROYAL Purple yearbooks may be purchased for $17 between 8a.m. and 5p.m. Monday through Friday in Kedzie 103. Yearbooks will be available in

The tables will also have access to intravenous therapy and feeding the animals intravenously. We will also be able to replenish blood to the dogs and cats intravenously."

Bruyette said, "The new cages will have space for larger dogs, where in the old ICU we didn't have a place to put large dogs that needed intensive care. Each cage has access for oxygen and fluid

"The new ICU can hold up to nine animals at a time. The unit will be caring for animals that are trauma patients, surgery patients and patients from internal medicine."

Bruyette said the new ICU will be a better working environment for students. The ICU is staffed 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Kay Backues, senior in veterinary medicine, said the lack of space was the biggest problem with the old unit.

"If the dogs and cats needed to be on monitors there wasn't enough room to work on them, and have other animals in the cages," she said. "When the equipment was being used there wasn't enough work space to work on emergencies.

"It was very frustrating to work around stored equipment. It will be nice to have more space."

Bruyette said the unit should be finished within the next week.

"Physically this unit compares to the units at Penn State and Colorado; it will be one of the nicer ones.'

Wefald said when he became K-State president, he called in Debate coach Ed Schiappa, instructor of speech, and they put together a program with a $25,000 base budget for traveling expenses and $15,000 for academic scholarships.

Schiappa resigned last year to go to another university.

"Before I came to K-State, we were ranked 45 or 50 in the nation, also-rans," Wefald said. "Schiappa and I established a goal of becoming No. 1."

If you thought that finding a color Macintosh* system you could afford was just a dream, then the new, affordable Macintosh LC is a dream come true.

The Macintosh LC is rich in color. Unlike many computers that can display only 16 colors at once, the Macintosh LC expands your palette to 256 colors. It also comes with a microphone and new sound-input technology that lets you personalize your work by adding voice or other sounds.

Like every Macintosh computer, the LC is easy to set up and easy to master. And it runs thousands of available applications that all work in the same, consistent way-so once

Engineer teams build mini-vehicles

Students use sacks of supplies

LAJEAN RAU Staff Reporter

A paper sack of supplies and two hours was all 14 teams of engineering students had to build a minivehicle that would outdistance its competitors.

Each team, which ranged from one to five members, was given the same sack of supplies, but that's where the similarities ended.

After they dumped sacks out all over the tables in Paslay Lecture Hall, most teams spent about the first 15 minutes staring at the contents, which ranged from an empty milk carton to 10 nails and two McDonald's drinking straws.

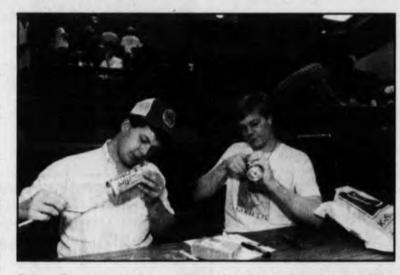

Gradually, ideas and arms started

"No, no, no! That won't work," they said. "No, no ... yeah! Try Aluminum cans were cut and bent. Rubber bands were stretched, wrapped and twisted. Dowel rods were cut, split and hammered.

Little vehicles gradually grew out of the piles of junk, and no two looked alike.

The basic objective was to build something that would travel a long way, and the energy had to come solely from the object - it could not be pushed or projected like a sling shot.

The contest tests mechanical knowledge as well as their creativity and imagination," said Paul Fisher, senior in chemical engineering and member of Steel Ring senior engineering honorary, which sponsored the Pieces Parts contest.

"They have to figure out how to power it - to transfer the energy from a rubber band or elastic into movement," he said. "They also have to take into consideration friction and weight, and how they can work for or against them."

Contestants knew nothing in advance. They were given the supplies and design requirements when the contest began at 7 p.m.

"That's the problem," said Brent Vopat, sophomore in electrical engineering. "We just hope no one else knew what it was before-

Most team members said they were confident their contraption would go. They just weren't sure

"If it works, I think we have a good chance at winning," Vopat said. "But if it doesn't, we're in big

Few people were nervous about the time limit.

"Ask me that in 40 minutes, though, and I may change my mind," Vopat said.

People built, made trial-runs in the halls and rebuilt. Some teams had to start over at square one when committee members told them they were violating rules.

The biggest controversy surrounded what exactly qualified as a projectile and what was legal when launching the vehicles.

Contestants came up with questions the committee couldn't even answer - without thinking a bit.

"A lot of these questions we couldn't have anticipated," Julie Bostater, senior in mechanical engineering and member of Steel Ring, said. "We'll write them down for next year's contest."

The contest deadline was extended 20 minutes because the committee members said they didn't think enough people were

Bush gave OK to Iraqi rebels, sources say

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Bush signed secret orders in January authorizing the CIA to aid rebel factions inside Iraq, about the time he was publicly exhorting the Iraqi people to overthrow Saddam Hussein, intelligence sources said Wednesday.

The orders, known as an intelligence finding, were described as granting broad and general authority for clandestine activities to undermine the rule of Saddam and to support efforts by opposition forces inside Iraq, said the sources, speaking only on condition of anonymity.

Bush, speaking to reporters as he wound up a four-day Florida vacation, declined to comment on the matter, saying he never talks publicly about intelligence matters.

He reiterated the United States will not now intervene militarily to protect Iraq's minority Kurds and Shiites from a brutal quashing of their uprising against Saddam.

"I do not want to see us get sucked into the internal struggle in Iraq," the president said.

It could not be immediately learned to what extent the CIA authority might have been used. NBC News reported Tuesday that the Voice of Free Iraq, a clandestine antigovernment radio station, operated during the Kuwait conflict under CIA financing.

Bush declined comment about any contacts between the United States and Iraqi rebels. And, asked about such collaboration at a congressional hearing two weeks ago, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said only, "That's a subject I can't get into in

If the authority has been used to aid the rebels, it would add concrete actions to the verbal encouragement Bush and other administration officials have given rebels to overthrow their president.

Critics have accused Bush of misleading resistance groups into believing the United States would come to their aid if they challenged Saddam's

On Feb. 15, Bush suggested that "the Iraqi military and the Iraqi people (should) take matters into their own hands to force Saddam Hussein the dictator to step aside.

In January, while saying it was not U.S. policy to target Saddam, Bush had said, "No one will weep when he is gone.'

As recently as March 19, Bush said Iraq's continuing use of helicopter gunships to put down revolt would "make it very, very complicated in terms of bringing about a final cease-fire." But, he has refused to allow U.S. forces to attack the helicopters.

Kurdish and other dissident groups have said they feel betrayed by the United States as Saddam's forces have brutally re-established control over cities in rebel strongholds and created a flood of refugees fleeing what they fear is an impending mass slaughter.

Wednesday, Sen. Al Gore, D-Tenn., joined those attacking U.S. inaction.

"I don't think it's right for us to stand by and do nothing while the Kurds and others who oppose Saddam Hussein are being slaughtered," he said at a news conference, adding the refugees' only offense has been to respond to our call to rise up and oppose Saddam.

Cultures promoted in weeklong event

MIKE MARTIN Collegian Reporter

The annual K-State International Week is providing the more than 1,200 international students enrolled at K-State a chance to show their own foreign cultures.

The K-State International Week started April 1 and will continue until April 7 and is sponsored by the K-State International Coordinating Council, coordinator of all the events.

"We wanted to have a special week to promote different cultures at K-State," said Cosima Dabbas, graduate student in journalism and mass communications and the president of the international coordinating council.

"American students and faculty can be exposed to these different cultures," she said.

She said K-State is attended by students from 101 foreign countries and representation from as many of these countries as possible during the week is encouraged.

"There is a big number of active groups who participate," she said, adding the number of groups has increased over the years.

"Everybody participates one way or another," she said. The week began with the performance of traditional folk songs by members of the Chinese Student and Scholar Friendship Association.

The event was well-attended, as were all the other events that have taken place so far, including the free movies that are being shown at the K-State Union Little Theatre, Dabbas

See related story/Page 10

"Attendance at events has been higher than last year," she said.

Events are scheduled for every day this week, including international cultural exhibits in the Union Courtyard Wednesday and an international potluck dinner Sunday at the K-State International Student

The Union cafeteria is also helping to promote the week by serving international food this week.

MOSCOW - Soviet and Lithuanian government representatives met Wednesday to prepare for negotiations on the Baltic republic's troubled drive to break from the Soviet Union.

Soviet Justice Minister Sergei Lushchikov and Lithuanian parliamentarian Alexandras Abishala met in the republic's government mission in Moscow. The next step is a meeting in the Kremlin on Thursday, according to news reports.

Lushchikov told the state news agency Tass that the three-hour talks were a step toward negotiations. He said both sides took a constructive approach and tried to identify "sore points in advance to avoid pitfalls" in future meetings.

Abishala also said the meeting went well.

The independent Russian Information Agency said both sides agreed to discuss goals and procedures of further talks. An earlier round of discussions broke down last

JEFF STURDY

Collegian Reporter Steven Thompson had less than a few hours to say good-bye and prethe Middle East Wednesday night in Haymaker Hall. When Thompson's company was called in for duty on December 17, they did not get the normal 48 hours to prepare to leave. "I was called around 10:30 p.m.

and informed that we were leaving," Thompson said. "I went home and grabbed some bags and headed for Fort Riley.'

"It was very sudden and very emotional," Thompson said. "You don't know how bad it hurts to leave in a situation like this until you do it - we knew we were playing for keeps."

the Iraqi's couldn't find us," Thompson said. "We ended up about one mile from the Iraq border. We could see the border and even the Iraqi soldiers in their bunkers.'

"The sand was so flat, you could look out for miles and not see anything," Thompson said.

Thompson said even though test bombing was part of everyday life at Fort Riley, the massive air attack which occurred during his stay near the Iraqi border made him realize how much damage the air bombing was doing. Once the ground war began, Thompson was separated from his Things had gone better than planned when the allies invaded Iraq, Thompson said.

"When we went through Iraq looking for our division the Iraqi soldiers would surrender to us by the hundreds," Thompson said. "They were so glad to see Americans. One morning we woke up and there were Iraqi soldiers surrendering to us."

Thompson said enemy prisoners of war were treated with respect. They were thrilled to be given food, drink and a safe refuge, he said.

Council adopts truce resolution

UNITED NATIONS (AP) - The Security Council on Wednesday adopted a truce resolution that forces a defeated Iraq to its knees, demanding it abolish weapons of mass destruction, renounce terrorism and repair the damage of its occupation of Kuwait.

If Iraq accepts the truce resolution, it would take effect immediately. The U.N.-ordered trade embargo on Iraq would be lifted in stages. U.N. peacekeeping troops would replace allied soldiers. Iraq's U.N. envoy called the resolution "outrageous" and "one-sided," but he said his government had yet to decide on compliance. Under pressure, Baghdad has accepted all previous council resolutions since its defeat in late February.

"Iraq now has a clear choice," declared Sir David Hannay, the British ambassador. "It can, by accepting this resolution and by implementing it rapidly and honestly, turn its back on the errors and crimes of the recent past, or it can perpetuate the suffering ... for a further period until it becomes intolerable."

Soviet Union changes exchange rate

MOSCOW (AP) - The Soviet Union yielded to black market pressure Wednesday, offering more than four times more rubles for a dollar on a key exchange rate and pushing the Soviet currency toward use in international trade.

The change in the foreign exchange rate for tourists was a tacit admission that many travelers and Soviets are bypassing the state bank in search of better deals, depriving Kremlin coffers of badly needed hard currency.

Soviets said the higher cost of buying dollars — up from 5.8 rubles per dollar to 27.6 rubles - will prevent many from traveling outside their country.

The ruble is all but worthless outside Soviet borders.

Chemicals leak from GM parts plant

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) - A hazardous chemical leaked from a pipe at a General Motors auto parts plant Tuesday and mixed with another chemical, creating irritating fumes that prompted the evacuation of about 1,500 employees.

Thirty-four people were sent to hospitals after the spill at the Inland Fisher Guide Division plant on the city's west side, authorities said. Two people were admitted for observation and the rest were treated and released.

The vapors were created when nitric acid, which is used to anodize aluminum, came into contact with caustic soda, said city fire spokesman Richard Jahn.

Jahn said the substance could have exploded if it mixed with

Attorney clears man from shooting

WICHITA (AP) - A man was justified in the fatal shooting of another man who kicked in the door of his apartment and pointed a gun at him, the district attorney ruled.

District Attorney Nola Foulston on Wednesday cleared Bruce Patterson, 36, of Wichita, of any guilt in the shooting Monday. Randall Offt, 36, also of Wichita was killed by shotgun blasts fired by Patterson.

Authorities said a woman had broken off a relationship with Offt in January and had since met Patterson.

Offt had continued to try and contact her, but she refused his Monday, Offt telephoned the woman, but she hung up on him.

He called back, and Patterson tried to speak to him. Offt then showed up at the apartment Patterson and the woman shared, shouted several threats and then kicked in the door.

Committee tables budget discussion

TOPEKA (AP) - A Senate committee slogged through individual budgets for Kansas Board of Regents universities for an hour and a half Wednesday before abandoning its discussion until

The Senate Ways and Means Committee took no action on the budgets, but heatedly debated its subcommittees' recommendations. The subcommittees based their recommendations on budgets sent to the Senate by the House, but made several changes.

For the regents systemwide, the Senate subcommittees do not endorse the tuition increase recommendations passed by the House. Those recommendations would have allowed the regents to increase spending by $7.3 million.

The House recommended that tuition for resident students be raised by 8 percent at the University of Kansas, K-State and Wichita State University and by 3 percent at Emporia State University, Pittsburg State University, Fort Hays State University and the Kansas College of Technology.

Tuition for out-of-state students would be raised 20 percent under the House recommendations.

House advances education bill

TOPEKA (AP) — A proposed budget for the Department of Education, with a whopping $110 million increase in general aid to school districts but cuts in specific programs, received the House's tentative approval Wednesday.

The bill would appropriate more than $1.1 billion in state tax dollars - roughly 45 percent of the total available - to the department for the fiscal year that begins July 1. Of that, almost $842 million would be for general aid to the state's 304 school

The increase in general state aid reflects the House's passage just hours earlier of a bill to increase income taxes to raise $119.6 million. Supporters of the tax bill hope that a large increase in state aid will prevent increases in district property tax mill levies.

Future teachers promise to help minds

Group pairs college, high-school students wanting to educate at secondary level

KIMBERLY KOHLS Staff Reporter

"As members of Teachers of Tomorrow Collaboration, we are eager to share our uniqueness and contribute our talents in friendship to the ultimate benefit of all mindkind."

This is the promise 20 Junction City high-school students and 20 K-State secondary education students signed when they became involved in the Teachers of Tomorrow Collaboration

The collaboration pairs highschool students who want to be teachers with secondary education students in Teachers of Tomorrow.

Wednesday, the high-school students were on the K-State campus and went through the day with their

"I went to Jim's education classes, toured campus and went to his fraternity for lunch," said Daniele Cunningham. Her partner is Jim Struber, junior in secondary education.

Cunningham, a senior at Junction City High School, plans to attend K-State and major in secondary education-math.

"I want to teach anything above trigonometry," Cunningham said.

There are many purposes of the collaboration for the high-students and also for the college students. The high-school students learn what is expected of teachers and the profession of teaching

"When Dr. (Rosemarie) Deering came to our high school for the first meeting of the collaboration, she basically told us what is expected and needed of teachers," Cunningham said. "This was good for me because the only perspective of teaching I had was from the stand-point of a student. It was good to tell us what a teacher

Deering, assistant professor of California, where there were a wide secondary education, is the coordinator of the collaboration.

"It's amazing how put-together the students are," Deering said. "They are just in high school, and yet they know they want to be teachers."

Friendship is another purpose of the collaboration. In their contracts, the participants promise to maintain weekly communication by mail or telephone and share quality experiences and tell each other of at least one academic success.

Along with this, the students are to share information about their families and friendships. Friendships made through the program are expected to last long after the school year is over, Deering said.

Deering said she feels teachers need to be aware and understand other cultures so they can better reach students to teach them.

Academics is also important to the collaboration. According to the contract, the students are to serve as academic leaders and role models to their peers and are to make a serious effort to achieve to their highest potential.

Deering said she plans to continue the collaboration for years to come, and someday hopes to carry the program to the middle-school and grade-

OKs income tax bill

By the Associated Press

TOPEKA - A proposal to increase income taxes to pay for what supporters call property tax relief won final House approval Wednesday and went to a skeptical Senate.

The House voted 64-61 to approve the bill, which would raise $119.6 million annually. The money would be distri-buted to local school districts, and supporters say it would enable those districts to avoid increasing their property tax

The bill had relatively little support from Republicans, many of whom saw it merely as a proposal to increase taxes to pay for more spending by the state. The House's Democratic leaders saw its passage as a significant milestone in the debate over property tax relief.

"You have to look it as a very important vote," said Speaker Marvin Barkis, D-Louisburg. "Now, the Senate is going to have to decide whether it wants to deal with property taxes and taxes in general. The game shifts to the Senate.

The Senate has yet to debate a plan to increase taxes to pay for property tax relief this year. Both houses have rejected proposals to amend the state constitution to change the rates counties use to determine how much different kinds of property are worth for tax purposes.

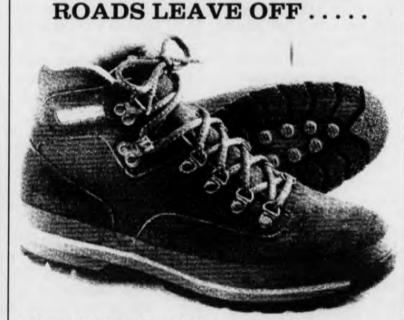

The Senate's Republican leaders have said there is growing opposition among their members to the idea of raising taxes for any purposes. Senate Democrats appear much more

"Over here, there's a pretty strong feeling against an income tax increase," said Sen. Dan Thiessen, Independence, chairman of the Senate Assessment and Taxa-tion Committee. "I don't see that the thinking of the Senate has changed at this point."

Senate Minority Leader Jerry Karr, D-Emporia, said he saw the House's vote as significant in the debate over property tax relief.

If correlation does exist, pass the ammo

soon, Congress will decide whether or not to pass a controver-sial piece of gun control legislation called the Brady bill, after former President Reagan's press secretary.

Under the present House version of the bill and its Senate counterpart, firearms dealers would not be able to sell a handgun until they had sent the local police a form completed by the would-be buyer and had waited seven

The assumption being made behind this legislation is that there is some correlation between the general availability of small arms and the rates of crime and violence in the United States. The obvious question is, "Is this a valid assumption?"

In attempting to find data to answer this question, I discovered a single, comprehensive review and analysis of the research literature available on weapons, crime and violence in the United States. As best as I could determine, it is the most extensive study of the literature to date.

The study, which began in 1978, was published in 1983 by the Social and Demographic Research Institute of the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, under a grant from the National Institute of Justice. The review, titled "Under the Gun: Weapons, Crime and Violence in America," by James Wright et al, was well worth the reading and highly enlightening.

Besides affirming what most people al-ready believe — that the United States leads the world in violent crime and that there are more guns in this country in absolute and proportional terms than in most of the Western nations — the information in the review one could reasonably call conclusive contained a number of interesting facts. For instance:

■ We know the United States leads most of the Western world in total numbers of firearms, but how accurately and with what precision do we know it? Wright reports that total weaponry in 1978 in private hands was estimated to number somewhere in the vicinity of 120 million, give or take 20 million. The rather stunning impression of the estimate is largely due to the fact that privately owned guns are not required to be registered on a nationwide basis. We really don't have hard empirical data on the number of weapons out there. At present, we have even less knowledge of the number or kinds of firearms in private hands, how they are used, why they are owned or how long they last.

■ The number of firearms owned in this country increased at an alarming rate from 1969 to 1978. The large increase of about 65 million, however, must be weighed in view of several factors such as natural increases in the population, increased sport and recreational demand and enhanced demand from police. When these considerations are factored out, not more than a few million long guns and about 5-8 million handguns can be ascribed to other uses such as crime (based on 1978 data).

 By far, the largest share of private firearms is owned primarily for sport and recreational uses. Some sources suggest that sport and recreational guns outnumber protection guns by 3 to 1.

■ The average gun owner is a small-town or rural middle-class Protestant male from the southern or western United States.

■ Substantial evidence from several sources indicates that whether one's father owned a gun is the single best predictor of whether the respondent owns a gun. According to Wright, this strongly suggests that the typical adult firearms owner had experience with small arms beginning in early childhood.

■ Surprisingly, little empirical research has been done on firearms as a cause of criminal violence. And equally little research has been done to determine if firearms are a deterrent to crime. There is some evidence, however, that the risk to a burglar of being shot and wounded or killed by the intended victim while entering the victim's residence is on the same order of magnitude as the risk to the same criminal of being apprehended, convicted and imprisoned for the crime (about 1-2 percent).

Evidence on the uses of firemarms by victims in potentially deterrable crimes suggest the probability of a successful victimization decreases, but the probability of injury or death to the victim increases if one uses a gun in defense.

Of the homicides committed between 1960-1978, about 75 percent involved handguns.

■ There is no evidence to suggest criminals prefer small-caliber guns, nor is there evidence criminals prefer cheaper weapons.

Stolen handguns contribute substantially to the potential supply of crime firearms — estimated at about 275,000 handguns stolen from private residences each year.

■ Large majorities of the public favor measures on a national basis requiring the registration or licensing of both new and presently owned firearms. The undertone to public thinking on gun control (right or wrong) is that firearms, like cars, are intrinsi-cally hazardous, and the government should keep track of them for that reason alone.

On my original question of whether there would be less criminal violence if there were fewer guns, the available research, according to Wright, was highly inconclusive. The evidence is firm, however, that attacks with a gun lead to the death of the victim about two to six times more often than attacks with an alternative weapon, such as a knife. According to the study, this might imply guns are intrinsically more lethal (in which case their restriction might lower the homicide rate), but, on the other hand, it might imply only people who are intent on bringing death to their victim preferentially choose firearms as the means (in which case firearms restrictions would not lower the homicide rate).

he study found nothing in the literature, which allows one to choose definitely between these possibilities. In the absence of better data, it remains a plausible hypothesis that persons who attack with a gun are more intent on killing, and therefore, kill at a greater rate.

The authors conclude "the prospects for ameliorating the problem of criminal violence through stricter controls over the civilian ownership, purchase or use of firearms

Sadly, if that is truly the case, then I guess we had better start passing out the

Honesty: Finney steps foward, yows to take blame vows to take blame

Kansas is once again in a fiscal bind.

Taxes will probably go up, despite campaign promises of cutting state spending and easing the tax burden on Kansans.

And as with most tax hikes and broken promises, taxpayers are going be hot under the collar and looking for a scapegoat. Usually, the government points fingers outward at external factors. Not this year.

The 1991 Kansas Legislature may go down in governmental history. This year, the government actually offered up one of their ranks as a scapegoat - a move unheard of in political circles.

Even more amazing, this politician offered herself up.

Last week, Gov. Joan Finney stepped briefly into the limelight, and said she would take the blame.

She said she holds herself accountable for any negative public reaction due to any tax increases stemming from this legislative session. She also said she was willing to accept any proposal, from either party, to provide new funding to adequately fund needed state services.

She will get all the blame, criticism and negative feelings by accepting that responsibility.

Finney should be commended for her sincerity and accountability, something so lacking in today's politicians. She is risking many things by putting her neck on the chopping block re-election springs to the top of

Nyet'-Georgian secession denied despite constitutional right

Georgia has voted to secede, and the central government won't let them leave. A headline from 1860s America? No, some of the latest news out of the Soviet Union.

The people of the Soviet republic of Georgia, which is located on the southern border of the U.S.S.R., recently voted overwhelmingly to secede from the Soviet Union.

Moscow said "nyet" to this latest secession vote by one of the 15 republics which make up the superpower. Other republics in the U.S.S.R. have also cast ballots to secede, but as in the case of Georgia, the government of Mikhail Gorbachev has made it clear those republics will have to fight their way to independence.

And who is surprised by Moscow's reaction? Perhaps no one. But if there are some, it may be because they've read the Soviet Constitution.

That document, adopted 14 years ago in a time when Communist officials won unbelievable landslides, states that each Soviet republic has the right to secede.

So, in the age of perestroika and democratization, a few have done so. And they've been told what everyone has known for a long time, the Soviet Constitution is worth only the cost of the paper its printed on.

It seems that perestroika, which means restructuring, can have only one designer, and his name is Gorbachev.

K-State greek system provides many with greatest experience

vowed upon my honor, the next time I saw a lack of knowledge about the greek system before I graduated, I would submit this article. The one point I do agree with columnist Roblin Meeks upon is that the subject has been beaten like a dead horse. Now, some truth based on fact.

While the greek system, like any other organization, is not perfect, its advantages for members and the University are numerous.

By joining a greek organization, students increase their chances of graduating by 20 percent. Isn't the diploma the real goal of every college student? The all-greek grade point average at K-State is consistently higher than the campus average. And of the leadership positions available on campus, 60 to 65 percent are occupied by greeks. Does a degree with a good GPA and several leadership experiences come from living in a problem state? I don't think so.

Since 1875, all but two of our illustrious American presidents have established their roots in the greek system, as well as 63 percent of their cabinet members. Right now, 76 percent of our nation's senators and 85 percent of the current Fortune 500 executives have experienced the greek experience.

As pointed out in Meeks column, hazing incidents do occur in greek organizations. Two years ago, a couple of greek organizations were indicted for hazing. However, swift judicial action resulted in extended periods of probation for these houses. And Meeks, no, the governing was not done by Barb Robel, but by Intrafraternity Council and Panhellenic Council - by students themselves.

Realizing their actions had been irresponsible, the guilty houses made serious changes in their pledge programs. They also sponsored educational programs for other greeks, programs aimed at preventing future incidents. As a matter of fact, the sorority on probation brought Dave Westol, prosecuting attorney for Kalmazoo County, Mich., to McCain Auditorium to speak about the dangers of hazing. The seminar was attended by about 350 students, on a voluntary basis. K-State greeks are all concerned about what happens, and we are all interested in learning ways of preventing further incidence.

What many people do not know is that hazing on this campus is not exclusive to the general letter greek organizations. The difference is that in addition to the state and the University regulations regarding hazing, the K-State greek system also has an anti-hazing policy that is abided by or punishable if neglected. I am in no way saying hazing is right, but I am saying greeks at least have a judicial system that takes steps to prevent it from happening again. In response to a possible accusation that greek student government leaders are elected only because their houses vote for them, well that may be true. But if you don't like this fact, then vote. Only about 20 percent of the student population is greek, so one of two things is true: 1.) Greeks represent the majority of the students who actually vote, or 2.) only 20 percent of the voting students are greek and the leaders are elected by the independent voters as well.

Another aspect of our problem-greek life at K-State that Meeks somehow missed is the philanthropies. Last year, K-state greeks raised $65,000 and three tons of food for charity. K-State greeks provide their time and good will to charity year after year, to such causes as the Flint Hills Breadbasket, the American Heart Association, the Ronald McDonald House, etc. If the greeks are such a trouble group, we'll take back our charity and see some "real life" problems continue to Meek's column indicates that because we have parties and functions, we are a bunch of "masochistic loopholers." Yes, we like to have parties among our ranks, but greeks are not the only groups on campus having parties with alcohol. You try to make greeks sound bad by comparing us to the University of Texas fraternities, your Ted Bundy example.

Well, I have my own example. If your column's printing is supposed to mean you're a top columnist at the Collegian, then Andy Rooney should win the Pulitzer. (Relating one experience to a totally different one is not an endorsement of that experience).

With regards to the loophole comment, doesn't it seem like a loophole that this is the third time this letter has been submitted (with alterations), and your column probably didn't receive a second look before publication?

es Meeks (and anyone else who supported his column), I'm a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, and proud of this fact. I couldn't have ever chosen a more rewarding experience than being a member of a brotherhood. I've made friends who care about me, I've improved my grades, I've learned to respect other people, I've developed into a leader and if I ever falter, there will be a brother to help me up - for life. If this is a problem, then I admit it. And please enter me into "The Greatest Experience of My Life" program, wherever it may exist, so others might follow and enjoy the same.

Cheerleaders hit Sweet 16

K-State squad's goal to make top 5 with reworked routine

DAVID PRITCHARD Collegian Reporter

One K-State team has made the Sweet 16 in the national championships four of the last six years. The K-State cheerleading squad will compete in the National Cheerleading Championship in San Antonio, Texas, for the second consecu-

"Our unity is better this year, and we just work better together," said Dean Robbins, team member and junior in business finance. "Our goal is to make the top five this year," said Tarra Carlgren, captain of the squad and senior in home economics education. "Last year, the routine was slower-paced and out of our skill level, so we had to rework some of it right before the competition. This year we choreographed our own routine and made it up according to our skill level."

The top five teams are the only ones who get to perform on ESPN, she said.

The squad must submit a twominute segment of video highlights, which focuses on the crowd participation aspect, said Scott Johnson, adviser for the cheerleading squad.

K-State was selected out of about 80 other schools in the large university division, which is comparable to Division 1A in other sporting events,

Some of the larger schools offer scholarships to cheerleaders, but K-State does not, Carlgren said.

This is like the Final Four of cheerleading," she said. "We have to go against other teams that actually go out and recruit cheerleaders like K-State would for basketball

K-State's squad must also pay its own way to the competition, which will cost $6,000, she said.

"As soon as we get back, we'll have to do a lot of fund-raising to pay for the trip," Robbins said. The squad has been working on its routine every day for the last month, and sometimes twice a day.

"Some of the cheerleaders have part-time jobs, but they're part of part-time jobs because of the amount of time spent practicing," Johnson

The cheerleaders performed in White City Tuesday night as a dress rehearsal, he said.

"I was happy with our perfor-mance. We hit both routines real well," Carlgren said.

Willie the Wildcat has also made it to the finals in the mascot competition.

Only four mascots are selected to compete and must do a one-and-ahalf minute routine of anything they want, Johnson said.

"I don't know what he's going to do, but he's asked for a large trophy, a fog machine and a leaf blower,' Johnson said.

Circuses have become a traditional money-raiser for the Shriners. This three-city tour, comprised of Hays, Salina and Manhattan, is sponsored by the Isis Shriners, whose territory encompasses 43 counties in northwest Kansas.

The money goes to support the Isis temple, headquartered in Salina. The temple, in turn, supports Shriner hospitals for crippled children and burn victims.

'We like to entertain people the well children - so we can help out those who aren't so well," said Bill Delholm, local Shrine Circus

Signing of Jackson gives Chicago 'Bo Sox'

By the Associated Press

SARASOTA, Fla. - Boston has its Bosox, but Chicago now has the Bo Jackson, promising to return from a hip injury that threatens his two-sport career, signed a free-agent contract Wednesday with the Chicago White Sox.

The one-year deal with club options for 1992 and 1993 could be worth as little as $700,000 or as much as $8.15 million over three years, plus award bonuses. "Right now, I feel like a caged animal," Jackson said at a news conference, a Sox cap atop his head and a Sox jersey slung across his shoulder. "I can't wait for them to open the chutes and let me go and do what I've been doing my whole life, and that's running.'

The one-year contract, with options for 1992 and 1993, pays Jackson even if he doesn't play this season, which appears likely.

"Realistically, we don't expect him until 1992," general manager Ron Schueler said.

Terms of the deal were not immediately available.

The 28-year-old Jackson, the only athlete of his generation who has successfully paired All-Star careers in baseball and the NFL, injured his left hip while being tackled in a Raiders-Cincinnati Bengals playoff game

He has been on crutches since and, after being waived by the Kansas City Royals last month, was said to be suffering from avascular necrosis, the partial loss to blood supply to the ball in the ball-and-socket joint.

Doctors have speculated Jackson will never play football or baseball again, but Jackson's physician, sports specialist Dr. James Andrews of Birmingham, Ala., was critical of those "doom and gloom" reports.

"We have had some very favorable information relative to the prognosis of Bo's hip," Andrews said. "We think Bo has an excellent potential to heal ... (and) the White Sox have been willing to accept the risk."

Schueler convinced owner Jerry Reinsdorf a week ago to spend considerable money on the ailing Bo, saying, "Any time you can get an athlete of Bo's caliber, you've got to take that gamble. If he can bounce back, we've made a great gamble."

"We won't risk his condition just to meet some timetable," said Dr. James Boscardin, the White Sox's orthopedic surgeon. "He'll be on the field when his hip is ready."

"My prognosis has come a long way since the injury," Jackson said. "I'm able to walk with no pain. They won't let me go out and run - yet. But things are coming along great."

Jackson's contract calls for a $700,000 salary in 1991 with bonuses of $10,000 for each game available up to 80. The club option for 1992 is for his 1991 earnings less $100,000 and includes bonuses of $10,000 for each game available up to 150. The 1993 option is for his 1992 earnings plus bonuses of $10,000 for each game available, with a $3.75 million maximum.

Thus, if Jackson returns at midseason and stays healthy, he could earn $1.5 million in 1991, $2.9 million in 1992 and $3.75 million in 1993. The deal also includes several award

The contract doesn't bar Jackson, who has a year left on his $7.4 million Raiders' contract, from playing football again.

'We can't prevent that (Bo playing football), but we can protect ourselves, and we have," Schueler Raiders executive assistant Al Lo-Casale said Wednesday the team expects Jackson at the "middle of the season, just as we have the past four the best medical advice and care possible. We expect he will play football again this fall, and be a major contributor to the Raiders in the second half of the season and help us return to the playoffs."

Richard Woods, Jackson's agent, said about half the teams in baseball contacted him after the Royals, fearful Jackson's hip injury was careerending, released him. Under baseball's basic agreement, the Royals were required to pay Jackson $391,484, or about one-sixth of a one-year contract worth $2,375,000.

There were two or three teams in hot pursuit of him," Schueler said. "Some clubs that were interested, I know from their track records that he could have gotten more money. ... I'm sure they are disappointed they won't get the chance to outbid us."

Andrews, well-regarded by the White Sox for his work with players for their Class AA Birmingham farm

"The Raiders are confident he has club, and team medical specialists examined Jackson's records in detail Tuesday night. The two sides then needed "less than two hours" to draw up a contract," Schueler said.

Jackson, a former Heisman Trophy winner at Auburn, hit a careerhigh .278 with 28 homers and 78 RBIs in 111 games last year. He is a power hitter - his 109 career homers have averaged 398 feet in length - and a power runner, rushing for 698 yards in about a halfseason with the Raiders in 1990. He was picked for the Pro Bowl before being injured. Jackson is convinced he will play again — and play both sports — but Bo knows nothing is certain.

'Hey, if it's meant to be this way, I have to accept it. I can't change the Lord's will. If it's meant to be I'm through with sports, I'll have to do that," he said. "I know that I can go on and so something else."

Wentland 14th after 1st day

Heptathlon ends today

From Staff and Wire Reports

AUSTIN, Texas - K-State freshman Gwen Wentland was in 14th place after the first day of competition in the women's heptathlon as the prestigious Texas Relays got underway Wednesday on the University of Texas campus.

Wentland, who finished third in the heptathlon at the Big Eight Indoor meet, tied or set new personal records in three of the four events Wednesday to post a total of 2,387

The freshman from Grand Blanc, Mich., ran the 100-meter hurdles in a personal record 16.30, tied her multi-event best in the high jump with a leap of 5-101/2, set a P.R. in the shot put with a put of 34-51/4 and covered 200 meters in 28.01.

"Gwen's first three events w just as we had hoped for, but she didn't run very well in the 200," said K-State assistant coach Cliff Rovelto. "But most of the athletes in this competition have already completed their college eligibility, so Gwen is doing well to be in 14th place."

Kim Carter, a native of Wichita and a former star at the University of Houston, led the competition after the first day with a score of 3,669 points.

The heptathlon concludes today with the long jump, javelin and 800-meter.

Phillies pound Cardinals, 7-2

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) - John Kruk hit a two-run homer and Lenny Dykstra had two doubles as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the St. Louis Cardinals 7-2 Wednesday.

The Phillies took a 3-0 lead in the first two innings off loser Bob Tewksbury. After hitting a double, Dykstra scored on Von Hayes' sacrifice fly in the first inning. Dykstra's second double an inning later scored Dickie Thon, and Darren Daulton's single made it 3-0.

Jose Oquendo's homer was the only run off winner Terry Mulholland in three innings. Mulholland will start for the Phillies on opening day in New York Monday.

The Phillies extended their lead in the fifth on Dale Murphy's single and Kruk's home run.

A walk, Bernard Gilkey's double and a sacrifice fly by Pedro Guerrero gave the Cardinals their final run in the sixth. Philadelphia ended its scoring in the eighth off Todd Worrell, with two walks, a double play and Wally Backman's RBI

Ryan beats Ryan in battle

AUSTIN (AP) - Reid Ryan found out Tuesday night that 44-year-old pappy Nolan is still top gun in the Ryan family. Reid, 19, a freshman at the University of Texas, gave up four runs in two innings and trailed 4-1 to his dad when he left the exhibition game between the Longhorns and the Texas Rangers. Reid yielded five hits, walked one and struck out one in his 41-pitch performance.

It was the first known mound duel between a major leaguer single.

Nolan brought the "senior heat" at 92 mph in the first inning, while Reid's "junior heat" was clocked at 84 mph on the radar gun.

Big 8 baseball race develops

OSU, OU, MU, KU, K-State could battle for entire year

The Big Eight baseball race is off and running, and it's going to be a wonder as to who could finish first. For the past 10 years, Oklahoma

State has had a strangle hold on the conference title. The Cowboys have produced stars such as Pete Incaviglia and Robin Ventura on their way to these titles.

But the Cowboys might want to take a look over their broad shoulders and glance at three teams that are gaining ground — and quickly.

In the recent Associated Press Top 25 poll, Oklahoma was ranked 12th with a record of 23-7 overall and 3-1 in Big Eight play. O-State was ranked 19th with a 19-8 record and has yet to open conference play. They will do so this weekend in Lawrence, as they face off against the Kansas Jayhawks.

And then there is the University of Missouri, which slipped into the 25th spot by virtue of its 17-4, 3-1 record.

The main threat may come from 0-State's cross-state rival, the Oklahoma Sooners. It seems as if OU's first year skipper, Larry Cochell, has assembled a troop of talented young kids and molded them into a strong baseball team.

Last weekend, K-State saw what happens when you make a mistake against the Sooners.

In the third game, with one out and a lazy fly ball to left field, OU had its runners going. The ball was booted and the tying runs scored, and the Sooners won the contest with more running in the extra inning.

In the fourth game, a booted ball by the Wildcat defense again opened the door for OU. The Sooners won three of four games during the Easter-weekend series.

Another team is the University of Missouri. The Tigers have quietly put together a 17-4 record with a 3-1 conference mark after traveling to Ames, Iowa, to take on Iowa State last weekend.

Missouri's pitching staff has done a much better job than expected for this year. They have a team earned run average of 3.03 with 150 strikeouts, allowing 79 hits in 175 innings of work.

Although they've only played 21 games, the Tigers' leading hitter is John Hay. Hay has compiled a .373 average with four homers and 23 RBIs. As a team, Missouri is batting .274. They have scored 152 runs, most without the use of the longball. The Tigers as a team have 15 homers.

The other team to keep an eye on is Kansas. The team down the road has gotten off to a quick start in taking the lead in the conference with a 6-2 mark and currently has an overall record of 19-12.

It all starts with the Jayhawks' coach. Dave Bingham, who is beginning his fourth campaign at Kansas, has a world of experience and knows how to win. His career record of 642-370-2 puts him at a .642 winning clip. Winning two thirds of all the games he's in will definitely help KU win a Big Eight title.

They could have a firm hold on it or lose it when they face the Cow-boys this weekend. With a good showing, they could move into the Top 25.

I haven't seen O-State play yet, but when I received the fax of their stats, the numbers just came right out and rolled me over.

For starters, as a team they are batting .296 with 45 homers, 217 RBIs, 36 stolen bases in 52 attempts and their on-base percentage is .442. The Cowboys' top hitter is Lon Lucca, having played 24 or more games. Lucca is currently tagging the ball at a .386 clip. With his average, he also has 39 runs scored, 29 RBIs, 18 doubles, two homers and he manages to get on base 49 percent of the time.

The Cowboy pitching staff isn't that shoddy either. As a team they have 5.42 earned run average with 239 strikeouts in 234 innings of work. The Cowboys' leading pitcher is Scott Watkins with a 6-0 record.

If K-State can split with the Tigers, then maybe, just maybe, a trip to Oklahoma City — site of the Big Eight Baseball Championships — is in store.

Decision to stay important

SEAN MORAN

Collegian Reporter

K-State baseball fans can be grateful not only for what Brad Rippelmeyer has done on the diamond, but also what he didn't do his freshman

"At the beginning of my freshman season, I was close to quitting," Rippelmeyer recalled. "I wasn't sure I belonged on the Division I level and could play with these guys.
"I actually made the trip to Coach's office to tell him I was thinking about quitting, but luckily he wasn't there, so I went home and decided to stick it out, and things got better after that."

The 6-2 junior from Valmeyer, Ill., has been a steady contributor the past two seasons and is off to his best start this year. Entering this season, Rippelmeyer had hit .270 at K-State, but his 1991 statistics show he is getting better and better. He is currently hitting

.292 and has already clubbed as many home runs, six, as he totaled the past two years. His offensive production earned him a spot on the all-tournament team at the Aggie Continental Classic at Texas A&M earlier this season. Rippelmeyer hit .400 in the tourney, getting eight hits, including a pair of home runs.

... I went home and decided to stick it out, and things got better after that.

- Brad Rippelmeyer K-State baseball player

"I had always been a home run hitter in high school, but in my first two years here I didn't hit the ball hard consistently," said Rippelmeyer, whose 28 runs batted in this season are second on the team. "At the beginning of this season, I was hitting the ball hard, and if you hit the ball hard, it's got a chance to go out."

This season has also brought about changes on the defensive end for Rippelmeyer. Primarily used as a third baseman the past two seasons, he has seen time at both catcher and

"I like playing more than one position," Rippelmeyer said. "When you're out there every day for eight or nine months, it can get old, but when I can play different positions, it makes me more valuable to the team and as a prospect as far as the pros are concerned.'

"I like playing catcher the most, because you're in control of the game and are in on every pitch," Rippelmeyer added. "If I get drafted, I'm almost sure it will be at catcher because of my lack of speed. If you've got a good arm and can receive pitchers well, you're a good prospect."

Rippelmeyer already has a connection with the big leagues, as his father, Ray, pitched in the major leagues and is now the assistant farm director and roving pitching coach for the Cincinnati Reds. While being drafted is a strong possibility for Rippelmeyer, he sees himself still wearing the purple and white uniform next year

"I don't know what will happen in the draft," Rippelmeyer said, "but I know I'm happy here. I'm not anxious to leave. I like the players and coaches, so unless some miracle happens, I'll be back at K-State.

Theater students given exposure

Maullar helps make smooth transition from school to job

By the Collegian Staff

K-State's theater department offers a professional development course to help students make the transition from school to a job or a professional training program.

Marci Maullar, assistant professor of speech, not only teaches the course, but is active in bringing in professionals who conduct auditioning workshops to provide students with practice and feedback.

Maullar also works with the Snowmass-Aspen Repertory Theatre in Snowmass Village, Colo. Snowmass is a professional theater that attracts students nationwide for internships. K-State is sending four students with Maullar this summer to Snowmass Maullar said, "At Snowmass, students will have a chance to work with professionals. Agents will also be present at the theater, giving students invaluable contacts.

The internship at Snowmass is a paid internship that also provides housing for the students. There were 200 applications for internships this

Michael Solomonson, graduate student in speech, will be going to Snowmass as an assistant stage

"I heard of Snowmass Theatre and asked Marci about an internship there," he said. "I sent in my resume and was later interviewed on the phone. I'm excited about the professional credit and getting to watch professional people at their jobs. Snowmass Theatre will further my education and allow me to be part of a professional team.'

The development course helps to place students and work on their

"I feel our students can be very competitive nationally with their training," Maullar said. "A lot of our students go into summer theaters across the country. Some go into a theater job somewhere, and some will go onto graduate school for further theater experience.'

Every year, K-State invites a professional to speak in the training courses. This year the artistic director for Snowmass, Gordon Reinhart, is coming from Los Angeles. Reinhart will conduct a two-hour workshop about auditioning. A professional provides information about what the theater business is like and how to approach it.

If funding comes through, Maullar said, the course would like to bring in a fight master for stage combat or a voice dialect coach.

"From my experience as an educator and a professional, I feel K-State is definitely competitive with other schools," Maullar said.

'It is a good sign that we are competitive with other schools. Students here have the opportunity to do a lot of shows so they can begin their careers."

Solomonson is working on his master's at K-State and has been accepted to Nebraska University to work on his PH.D.. He said K-State has given him a good base.

'The programs at K-State are really wonderful and flexible," he said. "I felt I could map out the areas where I wanted to grow and work on

He said K-State has provided him with the opportunity to work with faculty members with professional theater experience.

The faculty members are good, and we are lucky to have Marci with her professional theater experience," Solomonson said.

'Her experience gives students insight to the professional world. K-State gives you a chance to explore your talents. Some schools like to put you in a cookie-cutter mold."

When theater students leave school, they will probably take any available work in both television or theater, Maullar said. Many times, people work in soap operas and commercials to make money, so they can follow their career in theater.

When theater students are ready to make their break, they go to a big city and work anywhere until they break into the business. Sometimes students will do showcases for nothing, just for a chance to be seen by an

If an agent signs a performer, they have more of a chance to get paid

"The competition in the world of theater is huge, and I want my students to be prepared when opportunity comes their way," Maullar said.
"Students need to know what they're up against and what it takes. It takes hard work, energy and you can't let

The Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institution Management and Dietetics sponsored a panel presentation in conjuction with the 1991 Grace M. Shugart Lecture Wednesday afternoon in the K-State Union Forum Hall. More than 100 K-State stu-

Michael Hurst, owner of the 15th Street Fisheries in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and chairman of the board and president of the National Restaurant Association, was the 1991 Schugart lecturer.

The panel presentation was moderated by Iain Murray, assistant professor of dietetics, University of Guelph, Ontario.

Hurst said that when one manages a restaurant for the sole purpose of profit, the chance of sterilizing the business is risked.

I have seen many restaurant food businesses go out of business with good food cost," Hurst said. "They go out of business when they forget to target the food customer. If you manage for people, not profit, you do very well."

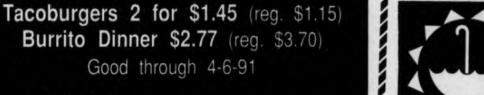

After Hurst answered questions from the audience, five panelists provided the audience with business essentials and advice pertinent to success in the food service industry. They were given five to seven minutes to talk.

'Magic Flute' to open in McCain

JENNIFER HOFFMAN

Collegian Reporter

"The Magic Flute" celebrates the love of music. The music is powerful, and the flute is magical.

This comical opera written by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart follows the comic adventures of Tamino and Papageno. The Queen of the Night wants her daughter back from Sarastro. She gives Tamino a locket with her daughter's picture in it, and he falls madly in love with her. Papageno is to be Tamino's guide. With a magic flute and a chime of bells, the two are off to face what lies ahead. The flute can transform people from evil to good.

"I think this opera is different because it's humorous and people will enjoy it," said Char Hoppe, senior in music education. "This is for a broader audience.'

Dialogue accompanies music, and translations are used to make the opera more modern. It is a physical opera, because the singing has to reach the back of McCain, said Director Charlotte MacFarland.

"Opera is big and poetic," she said. "There are magical effects in the set and lighting design. The music is fabulous, and the students have excellent vocal training."

A lot of the magic in this opera comes from people behind the

"It is a challenge because I've never worked in McCain, but I took advantage of it," said Dana Pinkston, graduate student in theater and design. "The majority of the show is hidden because it hangs above. We wanted to create a magical Mozart's opera uses powerful music, special effects world."

The scenery is different because 200 yards of silk is being used, which has never been done in McCain before.

"The lighting is very dramatic, but we kept it basically simple,' Pinkston said.

Eight weeks of hard work has gone into the production.

"The Magic Flute" will be performed at 8 p.m. tonight, Friday and Saturday in McCain Auditorium. Tickets are available at the McCain Box Office.

Library plans to grow after Throckmorton

LAURA BIRRELL Collegian Reporter

K-State has many architectural projects planned for its future, and the man that oversees these projects is K-State graduate Lee McQueen, director of Architecture and Engineering Services.

The foremost project is the Throckmorton expansion.

"This expansion of Throckmorton will be the end of phase two, which was actually a four-part project," McQueen said. "The original program was started in the early 1970s and should be completed in the fiscal year of 1995, if funds are approved."

He said the next project will be Farrell Library.

There are no planning funds for the library until Throckmorton is mostly complete," McQueen said.

"Then the planning will take at least two years. Right now, the state is in a tight financial situation.

"The funding for both K-State and KU is five to seven million in capital funds, and the school with the largest project gets the bulk of the funding,"

"If we merge with Kansas College of Technology in Salina, there will be construction work to do there," McQueen said. "A dormitory, aeronautical center and a student center are in the plans to be built within two years of the official merger. These projects depend on if the Legislature approves the merger."

Now you can afford to dream in color.

If you thought that finding a color Macintosh* system you could afford was just a dream, then the new, affordable Macintosh LC is a dream come true.

The Macintosh LC is rich in color. Unlike many computers that can display only 16 colors at once, the Macintosh LC expands your palette to 256 colors. It also comes with a microphone and new sound-input technology that lets you personalize your work by adding voice or other sounds.

Like every Macintosh computer, the LC is easy to set up and easy to master. And it runs thousands of available applications that all work in the same, consistent way-so once

Manhattan adds prefix to area telephone book

MELANIE SCHOENBECK Collegian Reporter

Thumbing through the Manhattan telephone book might prove to be a surprise. There is a new prefix, and it is 587.

People are familiar with the common local telephone prefixes 537, 539 and 776. Someday, 587, which was designed for business customers and their needs, will be commonplace.

The new exchange was brought into Manhattan to accommodate the needs and wants of our business customers primarily," said Marcie Wood, manager of Southwestern Bell Telephone Community Relations.

Customers want services that could not be satisfied in the already existing exchange banks of 537, 539 and 776, Wood said.

"For instance, Farm Bureau was the first customer that took this type of service, when we opened the new 587 exchange. They have a number, which is 587-6000. From there, they build to work their entire numbering system within the business. Not all the extensions in Farm Bureau are direct inward dial, but a majority of them are,"

Wood said. The entire 587 exchange is for customers will not receive this prefix.

It is difficult to find large banks of numbers, which can number in the hundreds, to give to customers, Wood said.

A number on the 587 exchange does not cost more money than a number on the other exchanges.

Another familiar exchange in Manhattan is the 532 prefix. K-State has this exchange reserved, except for a specific bank of numbers that does not belong to the University, said Fred Damkroger, assistant director of telecommunications.

Students use talking hands

Deaf, hearing communicate, socialize with sign language

RYAN HAYTER

Collegian Reporter

Deaf and hearing students at K-State now have the opportunity to socialize with one another in an informal setting through the Talking Hands organization.

Lynnette Matthews, a graduate student in college student personnel services, developed Talking Hands last semester to provide a mode of communication between the two groups through sign language.

We get together and talk at meetings," she said. "Students who are deaf don't get to communicate often on a one-to-one basis."

The group meets every Saturday and holds social events every other

Matthews said the organization has gathered for pizza parties, bowling, playing pool and movie dates.

"The events allow them the opportunity to share their environment with others and to socialize," she

The program is educational as well as social.

"I can speak as a beginner when I say that I knew nothing about sign language when I first began," Matthews said. "Now, I have learned the difference between American Sign Language and Signing Exact

She has also learned the alphabet and many basic words.

Natalie Smith, a freelance sign language interpreter and sign language course instructor for the continuing education department, said the majority of the group has a strong background in sign but beginners are welcome.

People who are learning have an advantage," she said. "It is highly individualized. You can learn exactly what you want to."

Smith said members of the group include interpreters, deaf people and others interested in sign itself.

Matthews said, "Many students don't realize that the average hearing person communicates about 60 hours per week, while deaf students are lucky to be able to communicate 20 hours a week.

"Talking Hands is more than a social activity," she said, "it is a way for the deaf community to communicate. It helps narrow this gap by providing that communication.

Displays show cultural variety

JIM STRUBER

Consumer Reporter

International students from nine different nations displayed different aspects of their culture for K-State students.

The cultural displays were set up at 9 a.m. Wednesday in the K-State Union courtyard and lasted until 3

Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, said the International Coordinating Council has sponsored the cultural displays for 10 years as a part of International Week. Student interest in the cultural displays has increased every year.

'Quite a few people have come through," Davis said. "There are just wonderful things displayed here."

Anwar Dabbas, graduate in political science and public relations director for ICC, said the activities for International Week will continue throughout this week.

"We have performers in the courtyard throughout the week," Dabbas said. "Tomorrow, there will be dancers from Vietnam and Friday there will be dancers from India performing in the K-State Union courtyard.'

Cosima Dabbas, graduate student in journalism and ICC president, said students were picking up information brochures, viewing slide shows and movies, and asking questions of the international students providing the

"I have been here for four years," she said. "There are more people here and they are asking questions."

Srini Sundhararajan, graduate student in electrical engineering, was proctoring a display table with many items from the country of India.

For instance, on the left side of the table sat a large elephant carved from teak and inlayed with ivory. Books, celebration masks, brass lamps, religious icons and a myriad of brass, bronze and wooden items were spread across the table in a meticulous manner. Colorful batik prints were carefully draped on the parti-

Sundhararajan patiently answered every question asked by students inquiring at the display table.

"The peacock is the national bird of India," Sundhararajan said to a group of students.

Joaleen Gant, sophomore in ac-counting, and Waukeshia Gant, freshman in marketing, were just leaving the Arab World display to look at the remaining displays. They each carried a stack of information from visits to other dispalys. Waukeshia had a new, small notecard with her name spelled in Arabic.

"Real interesting - learning about new cultures," Waukeshia Gant said. "The guy over there was telling us about the different sounds made when pronouncing Arabic."

Workshops to speed process

ULRIKE DAUER

Collegian Reporter

Many international students, who plan to stay in the United States for post-completion practical training, have problems with the application

To respond to this need, the International Student Center with the Career and Placement Center has two employment workshops today and Friday in the International Student

"Around this time of the semester, many students apply for practical training," said Larry Thorpe, assistant foreign student adviser,

"We think it can be more efficient if we can tell many people at once what they need to know," Thorpe

He said students can apply for post-completion training not earlier than 60 days before and not later than 30 days after graduation.

Thorpe said the workshop is primarily for students holding an F-1 visa. J-1 students don't usually stay for practical training, because they are sponsored by governments or organizations in their home countries or international organizations with other requirements.

He said he will give a short talk about eligibility and the application for post-completion practical training. He will also have application forms available for students who want to

Students with specific questions about their own situation should come to the International Student Center for individual counseling, he Marcia Schuley, assistant director Career and Placement Center, said this workshop is the basic workshop of the center combined with the visa workshop of the International Student Center.

Schuley said she will show students how to take an inventory of their experiences and write statements about it. She will discuss different formats for resumes, chronological and functional resumes, and explain how to make an inviting layout.

"With some other contests, people complain it takes too long," she said.

"This is just one evening."

In previous years, students had to build something — powered by a mousetrap — that would climb a wall. This Saturday morning for Engineering Open House, which Steel Ring also coordinates, there will be a similar contest for high-school students.

"They have to build boats," Bostater said. "But they have had the rules and design requirements since Thanksgiving, so they will be more prepared."

Because of the confusion, the contest was divided the Pieces Parts con-

Cynthia Haston, senior in interior design, gets a hand from Sandra Davidson, senior in interior design, after running off of the curb Thursday in front of Justin Hall. Haston and Davidson wheeled around campus to get a feel of how a person in a wheelchair operates as part of an assignment for a human ecology class.

Students experience limitations of disabled

ALISA DIETZ Collegian Reporter

Interior design students participated in a special project this week that was intended to give them first-hand experience with the difficulties of functioning on campus in a wheelchair.

Each student was assigned to do a common errand on campus while sitting in a wheelchair.

Margaret Boschetti, associate professor of interior design, created the assignment for the human ecology class Design for Exceptional Needs. It instructs students on how to adapt homes and buildings to fit a disabled person's special needs.

For the project, each student had the option of going to one of 10 places, such as the K-State Union, Farrell Library, the Division of Cooperative Extension Office or Holtz Hall.

The students had to check out a book from the library or get a soda from the cafeteria.

Sandra Davison, senior in interior design said, "We are doing this project so designers are aware of how disabled people function in their everyday environment."

The students have to be aware of the federal standards for a barrierfree environment being used in buildings today, Boschetti said.

"I have my students do this project for the experience and so they realize how important it is to design buildings for the disabled," Boschetti said. "This project used to be voluntary, but the last couple of years, I have made it required because the students enjoy it and learn so much from it. Cynthia Haston, senior in interior design said, "Participating in this exercise made me aware of the many obstacles in our environment that handicap the disabled. In many instances, I believe these situations could be avoided with the right design.

Haston was assigned to ride in the shuttle the campus provides for the handicapped. She said it is a good service and it helped out a great deal when trying to get from building to building.

The bathrooms and elevators on campus seem to be the most difficult obstacles to maneuver. There just isn't enough space to be mobile in these areas, Davison said.

She said that most of the time, there is not enough space to turn around once you get in the stall or the

K-State budget cut

Senate committee suggests $19-million funding decrease

CHRISSY VENDEL

Collegian Reporter

The Senate Ways and Means Committee cut the K-State budget $19 million Thursday in part of its proposed budget package for the Kansas Board of Regents.

In the package, K-State was appropriated $223 million from the requested $242 million, and $13 million was approved for the K-State Veterinary Medical Center, about $1 million less than requested. It will now be sent to the Senate floor for consideration.

Part of the $19 million cut can be attributed to the exclusion of the Margin of Excellence. President Jon Wefald said he had not seen the report, but speculated on what other items were cut.

"It probably came from the faculty salary-base increase, other operating expenses, enrollment adjustments and program initiatives," said.

The committee's package also excluded funding for graduate teaching assistant fee waivers, student salary increases and the House's tuition recommendations, which would have allowed the regents to increase spending by $7.3 million if they would increase tuition to pay for it. After arguments over the financial needs of the Kansas College of Technology, the committee completely removed funding for KCT from Thursday's package until further information can be compiled regarding the K-State, KCT merger. Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said a hearing is scheduled for this Saturday to provide information to committee members about the mer-ger's benefits for the entire state. "We are working on bringing in people from different parts of the state to show the demand for the offerings of the merger," she said. K-State officials said they want to convey to the committee that the merger is a statewide mission. Sue Peterson, assistant to Wefald. said it will be beneficial for the committee members to hear all of the information regarding the merger at one time. "Employers from different areas of Kansas will testify that businesses need graduates from the technology programs," she said. "There are jobs waiting for those graduates."

Peterson also said more interest is being shown in KCT after the merger was proposed. "It may add prestige to KCT be- requested.

cause K-State already enjoys the reputation of good engineering programs," she said.

Don Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, said the hearing Saturday will address how the money saved through a merger, such as reduced administrative costs, would be

"Once they find out how the savings will be used, if they are satisfied, they will probably accept the merger," he said.

"How much money will be needed for equipment will be a major issue discussed, too."

Rathbone said the regents would be making the main presentation Saturday because they proposed the merger, and K-State officials would be there to offer input when needed.

The committee's recommended budgets for other regent institutions are as follows:

■ $254 million for the University of Kansas, about $12 million less than requested.

■ $240 million for the KU Medical Center, about $15 million less than requested.

■ $103 million for Wichita State, which had requested $108 million. ■ $39 million for Emporia State, which had requested $41 million. $36 million for Pittsburg State, from the $40 million requested.

■ $35 million for Fort Hays State, about $3 million less than

City aids spring clean-up

Trash to be taken throughout week

MELANIE SCHOENBECK Collegian Reporter

The City of Manhattan is helping with the chore of spring cleaning by carrying away unwanted materials placed on the curb.

The 1991 Spring Clean-Up Program effort is from April 8 to 15. The city has designated specific areas of pick-up and coordinated the areas with the six-day schedule.

All items must be placed adjacent to the curb by 8 a.m. on the scheduled

Steve Ivy, street department supervisor, said the crews will pick up a variety of materials including furniture, bikes, small appliances and leaves. Old tires will not be accepted because of landfill regulations. All items must be liftable by one man.

"We take away what one man can put in the truck by himself," he said.

People who will be doing yard work need to be aware of some requirements. Brush, tree limbs, leaves and grass clippings need to be separated from other materials left on the curb. This is because the yard debris will be taken to the county compost pile, Ivy said.

Tree limbs must be separate from all materials, he said. Leaves and grass clippings must be placed in marked bags or containers. The marking is to help the crews route the materials correctly.

Residents participating in the program need to be aware that household garbage is not included. Do not place containers that are to be saved on the curb, as they will be loaded on the truck. Precautions need to be taken to ensure materials are protected from the wind.

Community participation in the effort varies from year to year. Last year was not as busy as the previous year. The fluctuation might be attributed to weather, Ivy said.

"It depends on the weather. If it is nice, I look for us to have quite a bit to pick up," Ivy said. "It is supposed to be a nice weekend."

A project with this magnitude involves the entire street department, Ivy said.

"This department is busy all the time. The cleanup detracts from normal work, and it gives the guys a break," he said.

Allocations process disrupted with debate about BaGaLS request

The start of the Student Senate allocation process went smoothly until it reached the request from the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society. The Senate debated several amendments of a first reading for allocation to BaGaLS before it approved $61.92 for the group to use for printing and postage. Many senators questioned whether the organization represented enough students to warrant an allocation from the Senate. "I find it impossible to justify this money and the good that it will do for the students of K-State," said Derek Nelson, business senator. Camille Rohleder, engineering senator, agreed. "I'm not saying they don't need the money, I'm saying we need to justify the money we give them by seeing that it is informative to K-State students," she said.

Regina Estevez, arts and sciences senator, said, however, BaGaLS does offer a legitimate service to

"I hope you will fund this budget; it encompasses many people," she said. "It is a support group that is open to anyone.'

Those senators supporting the allocation said it would only cost .003 cents per full-time student.

First readings were also approved for the allocations of the following:

$12,968.20 for UFM.

■ $300 for Older Wiser Learning Students

■ $1,597.80 for the Black Student Union.

■ $4,699.80 for the Consumer Relations Board.

Marketing team named outstanding

The K-State National Agricultural Marketing Association marketing team won second place in competition at the national NAMA convention in New Orleans April

The student chapter was also named the Outstanding Collegiate Chapter of the year by the professional members of NAMA. The award, given to one of the 33 student chapters nationwide, is based on all the chapter's activities during

The chapter's nominee for the Successful Farming-Ferguson Scholarship, Dea MacFee, senior in agricultural economics, won the $1,000 award based on grade point average, student activities and activities in NAMA.

The marketing team presented its full-scale marketing plan for a com rootworm insecticide called "Anchor" in three heats, each heat containing fewer competitors, to reach their second-place finish, said Roger Long, senior in agronomy and K-State NAMA president.

The team began preparing its 20-minute presentation last October, and has met daily for the last couple of months to polish speaking parts and visual aids, Long said. We got a little better each time we did it," he said.

The presentation includes all areas of a marketing plan, including a logo, company history, pricing and distribution methods and advertising strategies. The insecticide is an actual product that will be released by a major agrichemical company in three to five years.

Chapter adviser and team coach John Riley, assistant director of agriculture resident instruction, said the team became more comfortable each time it gave the presentation, despite added pressures, bigger audiences and more judges.

Refugees line border seeking to escape

By the Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — About a million Kurdish refugees are crowded along the border opposite the Iranian town of Nowsoud trying to escape Iraqi government troops, Iran's official news agency said

The Islamic Republic News Agency said as many as 1.5 million refugees in all were heading toward Iran, which appealed for international aid to help them.

It said at least 40 Iraqi refugees died in the cold on the road from the northern city of Erbil to the mountainous Iranian border. Turkish newspapers reported that hundreds of others died of war wounds while trying to escape to Turkey.

Government officials and protesters in several Western countries pleaded Thursday for international efforts to help the fleeing Kurds. Britain and Sweden pledged a combined total of $36.3 million in aid.

President Bush, reacting to growing criticism of the hands-off U.S. attitude toward the violence in Iraq, repeated at a news conference in California that U.S. troops would not

"We will do what we can to help the Kurdish refugees," Bush added. Turkey has appealed for aid to care for the Iraqi Kurds, although it has closed its border and sent 400 more troops to keep out the fleeing Iraqis.

Gates placed on leave of absence

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Police Chief Daryl Gates was forced to take a 60-day paid leave of absence Thursday pending completion of key investigations in the videotaped beating of a black motorist by white policemen.

"I feel that I have been disgraced and defamed," Gates said after emerging from an 80-minute, closed-door Police Commission meeting. "I have no idea why this is happening. I'm very controlled. I always have been."

The commission gave no reason for forcing Gates to take the Mayor Tom Bradley on Tuesday asked for Gates' resignation, joining many critics of the department. Bradley, who lacks the authority to fire Gates, said the chief's response to the March 3 beating of Rodney King plunged the nation's second-largest city and its Police Department into crisis.

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) - Gov. L. Douglas Wilder says he is forming a task force to look into drug and crime problems on college campuses in the wake of a federal drug raid at the University of Virginia.

Wilder told a meeting of state college and university presidents Tuesday that they have the authority to impose strict standards of conduct on their students.

Wilder, who is considering a bid for the Democratic presidential nomination, called the meeting in response to a March 21 drug raid at the University of Virginia. Twelve students were arrested and three fraternity houses were seized by the federal government.

Exorcism to be performed on TV

NEW YORK (AP) - Network television, with the consent of a priest in the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York, plans to show the film of an exorcism performed on a teen-ager.

A 26-minute segment showing a priest exorcising a 16-year-old girl was to be shown on the ABC's "20-20" on Friday night, The New York Times reported Thursday.

But many church figures, who have not seen the filmed exorcism, have questioned the wisdom of allowing the segment to be shown, the Times said.

TOPEKA (AP) - Both houses of the Legislature will be in session on Saturday.

House and Senate leaders agreed Thursday that both bodies are sufficiently behind schedule in debating bills that a Saturday session is necessary.

The Legislature will take first adjournment April 13, the 90th day of the regular session, then return to Topeka April 24 for the wrap-up session, which is expected to run at least four days. Committee activity is dramatically reduced as both houses debate virtually all day between now and first adjournment.

At the start of Wednesday's sessions, the House listed 108 bills and resolutions on its debate calendar, and the Senate listed 50.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - A woman visiting a jail Wednesday as an interpreter ended up behind bars after a computer listed her as a military deserter. Nilda Brown, 25, of Kansas City was arrested after she had gone to the Clay County jail with defense attorney Robert Beaird, who represents a Spanish-speaking man charged in a cocaine case.

But when she presented identification at the jail, a routine computer check listed her as a U.S. Army deserter since July, Clay County Sheriff Jack Corum said.

Brown was held Wednesday for Army officials and was unavailable for comment, authorities said.

Kansas plant gets bomb order

PARSONS (AP) - The Kansas Army Ammunition Plant has been authorized to produce 10,000 cluster bombs to replace those used in the Persian Gulf War.

The new bombs were included in the Desert Storm Supplemental Appropriations Bill approved late last month.

In announcing the order Thursday, Senate Minority Leader Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas said they were very effective against Iraqi armor and artillery and in destroying mines.

"They had used this particular product in the Persian Gulf, and this is part of the requirement for them to get their inventory back," said Sudhir Chopra, senior vice president for Day and Zimmermann Inc., the contractor who runs the plant.

"Since this is the only place it can be produced, that's why it's coming to Kansas."

Actor proposes to girlfriend on stage

PARSONS (AP) - Once upon a time, there was a prince and a princess who were very much in love and decided to get married.

Actually, it was earlier this week. And it was Darren Helms who proposed to Lorraine Hobson during rehearsal of the Labette

Community College production "Once Upon a Mattress."

"It just came to me out of a moment of ...," Helms said Wednesday.

"Weakness?" Hobson asked.

"Wild, dramatic, romantic madness," Helms said. During the Tuesday dress rehearsal, Helms, who plays Prince Dauntless in the musical, halted the show during the finale and began a monologue on marriage and love. Helms, in his prince costume, knelt before Hobson, who plays

Princess Winifred in the show, and asked her to marry him. On a cue, Kent Land, who portrays a jester, brought an engagement ring and bracelet on a satin pillow to the scene. The entire company cheered and clapped, and Hobson sat there

"We realized she hadn't responded," he said. "Then she finally managed a 'Sure.'

In conjunction with Hunger Awareness Week, the Campus & Community Against Hunger is sponsoring a communitywide food drive to help restock the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Sheryl Taglieri, CCAH member, said at this time, people are not thinking about hunger, but the needs exist yearround.

CCAH will be distributing non-perishable food collection boxes Sunday throughout campus and Manhattan.

"Collection points will be distributed to living groups and departments on campus and in a number of grocery stores and community churches," Taglieri said.

Collection tables will also be placed in the K-State Union during Open House and April 17-19, she said.

CCAH will sponsor a speech on hunger by Dennis Mullin, former president of the Breadbasket, and Atina Hanna, Breadbasket executive director, April 10 at 3:30 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre.

There will also be a panel discussion at 7 p.m. April 11 at the Douglass Community Center in Manhattan.

Week to Pennsylvania senator dies in crash

Two school children killed by falling debris

By the Associated Press

MERION, Pa. - Sen. John Heinz and six others, including two children, were killed Thursday when a helicopter collided with his plane over a schoolyard at midday, authorities said.

The collision occurred as the helicopter was checking the landing gear of the senator's plane, authorities

The children killed were on the ground. Most were in class at Merion Elementary, and only a few were outside at the time of the fiery crash, said John Fowler, head custodian.

"Fifteen minutes later, there would have been 400 kids where the helicopter came down," Fowler said.

Heinz, a 52-year-old Republican, was an heir to the H.J. Heinz food empire. He was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives, representing Pittsburgh, in a special election in 1971 and was re-elected twice. He was elected to the Senate in 1976 and was re-elected in 1982 and 1988. Heinz and his wife, Teresa, have three children. He was the second ranking Republican on the Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee and was the ranking GOP member of Banking's securities subcommittee. Also killed were two pilots in Heinz' twin-engine Aerostar PA60, and two pilots in the Bell 412 owned by the Sun Co., police said.

Both aircraft burst into flames on impact and showered debris over houses and lawns.

The helicopter wreckage came to rest on the playground about 35 feet from the school. The plane fell to the ground on the other side of the building.

"The room started shaking, and the windows blew open," said Joelle Morgan, 10, a fifth grader who was in math class at the time. "The teacher velled, 'Fire.' Everyone was crying. Everyone wanted to go home.'

"I saw two children on the ground," Fowler said. "It was too hot to get close to them."

Heinz, in his home state for Congress' Easter recess, was en route from Williamsport-Lycoming County airport to Philadelphia, said his administrative assistant, Cliff

Shannon said he had heard reports that the instrument panel on the senator's plane did not show that the nose landing gear was locked and down.

Township Manager David C. Latshaw said the pilots of a Sun Co. helicopter overheard the pilot of Heinz's plane report the problem to the tower and went to investigate.

The helicopter was shuttling back

The teacher was trying to restrain and forth from the Philadelphia airport to Sun Co. headquarters taking board members to a meeting, said Sun spokesman Dick Jackman.

Federal Aviation Administration spokesman LeRoy Johnson said the helicopter crew had confirmed the plane's landing gear was down, and the plane was headed for the airport when the two collided. He said their radio conversations were taperecorded.

Gov. Robert Casey may appoint a successor to serve until a special election can be held in November. Heinz's term would have ended in January 1995.

House OKs Vets' tax break

The House bill would generate $120 million of income tax in addition to covering $9 million lost in military exemptions.

Legislation to change the taxing policy was introduced in response to the 1989 Davis v. Michigan lawsuit, which states one cannot discriminate between state and federal employees. Kansas is the last state to conform to the Davis decision. Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said he supported the military exemptions. In testimony to the House Taxation Committee, he said, "The arguments of equity and fairness with regard to the tax treatment of our military retirees seem to me to be compelling. How can we justify, as a state, continuing to single out for such harsh treatment a solitary class of federal retirees? I think we cannot."

'Magic Flute' blends Mozart, 20th century Translation displays talent of trio

REBECCA SACK

Collegian Reviewer

"The Magic Flute" is presented with all the pomp of opera and in the fanciful frivolity of Mozart. The show is a visual circus of grand costumes and sets of iridescent and vivid colors. The music is powerful and the performers exciting.

The K-State Opera Theatre and the Departments of Music and Speech combine to make this production of "The Magic Flute" their own.

Using an original translation by Lynbarbra Mahler and Charlotte MacFarland, who also directed the opera, the story is adapted to the 20th century. Some of the lines even go as far as Bart Simpson and Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles imitations.

These cheap shots at comedy are not as enjoyable as the quality voices of Rob Fann, who plays Tamino the prince; Lori Zoll, as Pamina the princess; and Ai-Ze Wang as Queen of the Night.

This royal trio shows its talent and operatic flair in high style. Wang easily manages the glass-of her character within a contained power of her light voice. Fann is a rather meek Prince with a great declaration in his gutsy tenor voice.

The trios of the Queen's Attendants and the Spirits create delightful music with the blend of a recording studio. These two trios also display the best costumes with grand headdresses and brilliant colors, both hair and clothes.

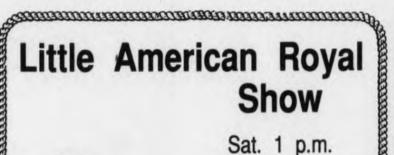

The plot of the opera moves along easily with intervals of informal speeches and comedic breaks from the Slaves and Papageno, played by Andy Stuckey. Stuckey captures the heart of the audience with his antics and humor based on the juxtaposition of the 20th century in the middle of a fairy tale. At one point he plays his panpipe and a rubber chicken falls from the sky.

The romance, idealism, frivolity and freshness of the amusement in "The Magic Flute" is purely enjoyable. Songs with words like, "Our life depends on love alone" and "Pop, pop, poppa," further the simple symbolism of the themes.

The opera builds to a happy enbreaking heights of her virtuostic ding of reunions, love and the runs. Zoll keeps all the sweetness triumph of good over evil.

Honor students can direct own education should you have been? You should have been in Union Room 212 at 7 p.m. listening to three seniors who publicly presented their senior honors theses as a finale to their prescribed Honors Program curriculum.

But what is the senior honors thesis, you might ask anyway? The senior honors thesis is the final step one must take in order to complete the Arts and Sciences Honors Program. Students, after completing at least two honors seminars and one colloquim (and still maintaining a 3.5 GPA overall), choose a topic of personal interest, ask for the assistance of a faculty member in that field, and undertake a detailed research project of master's degree

The result is a paper that usually runs between 20-50 pages, including graphs, figures, diagrams, statistics and other findings. One person even wrote a novella.

This year, the three students who outlined their yearlong plus research projects spoke to about thirteen people, eight of whom were university faculty members of the Arts and Science Honors Program Advisory Council or supervising faculty mentors. With a little simple subtraction, that makes an odd five students who were on hand.

But before anyone starts feeling bad, the blame rests mainly upon the shoulders of the senior in biology and pre-medicine, who in-hat were you doing on the night faculty in charge of the theses presentation. of April 2, 1991, at 7 p.m.? Where The whole affair has been haphazard at best, due mainly to the turnover of responsibilities. The result has been a last-minute operation, with little campus exposure or prior notification of Honors Program events. This time, at least, everyone has an excuse.

> Because I'm sure most of you are hungry to hear about the projects, I thought I'd give a brief summary of what transpired that

The first presentation was given by Jana Leep, senior in psychology and women's studies with an emphasis in English. (She is also a former columnist.) Her paper was entitled "The Exploration of Daughters' Perception of Mothers' Eating Attitudes and Behaviors." She focused on the eating disorder of of anorexia and the ways in which it could be passed from mothers to daughters.

Sam Ory, senior in political science, English and pre-law was next to speak on his chosen subject, "The Courts: Exceeding the Constitution." He examined the more recent adjudication of the federal courts within the adversary system codified by the Constitution. His premise was the courts have taken advantage of the relatively few checks placed upon them to act in more of a legislative dimension rather than merely an interpretive

The third presenter was Heather Simmons, vestigated "Extension and Recovery of Photosensitivity in Harris Sparrows." Being by no means scientifically oriented, I was more worried about this topic than any other. She was very succint, however, and understandable as she discussed the reaction of Harris sparrows to varying lengths of daylight, and the corresponding growth of gonadal size due to this exposure.

When she was asked of the importance of such a study, she responded that with dwindling natural habitats because of human expansion, the zoo movement has increased. One huge problem with zoos is getting the animals to breed successfully, and much can be learned about the reproductive habits of animals that can in turn provide insight into the procreative habits of endangered species. It was something I hadn't necessarily thought about. Who says college isn't applicable to the real world?

Each senior fielded several difficult questions from the small but scrappy audience, returning convincing replies revealing the large amount of time and thought that had been put into their respective studies.

As I sat listening to the speakers and the questions, I was thinking about how I would soon be presenting my own senior honors thesis and fielding my own questions. The thought that kept recurring to me was that these three students had taken advantage of the Arts and Sciences Honors Program's ability to cater to divergent interests.

Apart from the senior honors thesis, which is entirely the choice of a particular student, I don't think that honors students realize just how much influence they can have on their own education. More than merely choosing classes from the bi-annual line schedule, they can have a say in the classes that will be printed in it. Let me explain.

The Arts and Sciences Honors Program allows students the chance to enroll in classes a bit out of the ordinary, such as "Symmetry in Art and Nature," or "Consciousness and the Brain." These classes are taught by professors who have an acute personal interest in the subject, and usually keep their classes to smaller numbers for more one-on-one involvement.

What many honors program students don't fully understand, however, is that they can have even more of an impact on their

The body that determines the honors program class offerings is the Honors Program Advisory Council, which consists of both faculty and students in the honors program. Classes and professors are suggested by the members, and then the council approaches them about offering the class.

As of late, however, the council has had fewer suggestions, and with a massive budget cut coupled with an increase in honors enrollment, classes have been hard to come by. To alleviate this problem, all it would take is a suggestion or two from honors students for a class or a favorite professor to either the director of the advisory council, Larry Weaver, or the head of the honors program, Michael Donnelly.

ow it's easier than ever to give some imput. The students on the advisory council are in the process of creating an honors student organization whose primary concern would be to help with the curriculum and have more of a say in their learning. Look for meeting dates and times if your're interested.

For those of you thinking about writing a senior thesis in the future, I encourage you to attend the yearly presentations. It's a papable indication of students willing to take a stake in their education. It's kind of nice for a

It doesn't strike Manhattan citizens as funny. They have lived here long enough to know when to fill up, like before the prices jump or the Tuesday after students return.

What do you think of President Wefald's decision to teach a class next year?

"I've heard a lot about this. I know others who plan on taking the class. It would probably be a good class for me, and it would be interesting to have him as a teacher."

Kenya Booz, junior in pre-medicine

"I don't think it really matters one way or another; he should be allowed to teach it. I wouldn't feel any different if he was teaching my class. If he is qualified, I'm sure it will be a fun class."

John Camarena, sophomore in history

"I think it is a marvelous idea, because he needs to be more involved with the students. It will be a very good opportunity for him. I would want to be in his class if it were in my field."

ROTC rules archaic

A large, controversial percentage of the military we are currently so proud of is black. This group of individuals was banned from the armed services only 50 years ago. Now they are an integral, vital part of our strong power.

Yet, there still remains discrimination in the form of the military's archaic bans against homosexuals. Campuses nationwide are eliminating, or comtemplating the elimination of, ROTC programs because of this ludicrous fact. This movement is a result of nondiscrimination policies, and K-State should follow suit.

I don't necessarily want to see ROTC eliminated; it is indeed worthwhile. But if this is the action that must be taken to affect a change in the military's policies, then so be it. And only when the military abolishes its outdated modes of discriminating should ROTC be an active member of our campus community.

No need to feel foolish, ashamed

Editor,

With Brad Seabourn at it again, I was compelled to respond to his Easter challenge and explain why not all those who celebrate the resurrection of Jesus Christ are April's fools.

It is a clever, but faulty move to attempt to shock the average reader with an account of one of many mythological religious characters read about in the mystery religions of centuries past.

Anyone with half a brain can detect obvious and significant differences between the gospel accounts concerning the life of Christ and the fairytale-like accounts of the mystery

Seabourn's use of "Christian" words and phrases attempts to give credibility to his comparisons, but any scholarly research that looks at all factors involved yields an entirely different conclusion. For those who wish to look at a fair treatment of this topic, I direct you the book "He Walked Among Us" by Josh McDowell.

The four gospels were not written anonymously — Seabourn you are using arguments against the gospels that are 50 years out of date. And I don't have write out a chronology of the resurrection accounts in the four gospels, because it has already been done by Johnston Cheney in his book "The Life of Christ in Stereo." In his book, Cheney goes above and beyond Seabourn's misinformed challenge and dares to provide a harmonious account of all four gospels for the entire life, death and resurrection of Christ. Read it for yourself, Seabourn. The answers and evidence are there for everyone to

We, as Christians, can and do celebrate the resurrection of Jesus Christ this Easter, and every day, without needing to feel foolish or ashamed.

Give it a shot

Editor.

Well, well, well. It seems Eric Melin has done it again. Another band ruthlessly ripped apart by someone who has absolutely no interest in it or its music.

It seems to me we have a problem here. I have written countless letters (some printed, some not) regarding Collegian reviews, and I feel there's probably one underlying reason for all of them. I fail to understand why Melin reviews the concerts he does. He clearly hates the rock scene and everything it stands for. So why is he reviewing the stuff?

Obviously, he is not even going to give rock bands a chance. He seems to enjoy just plain slamming the band and its style, rather than paying much attention to the important stuff, like the music.

What Melin wrote was not a concert review. It was a slam-fest on rock 'n' roll that clearly shows his narrowmindedness. That's not how it should be done - not at all. A reviewer should be objective and open-minded. These are qualities Melin obviously does not

I'm not expecting him to love everything he sees, but I would appreciate it if he would refrain from slamming the band and just tell us why he didn't like it. I would advise Melin to at least try and adopt this attitude in the near future. If he can't, then I think he needs to take his writing elsewhere, and the Collegian needs to find someone who can do the job right.

Since there is more than one Collegian reviewer, it's about time they take advantage of them. Melin should not be allowed to review rock concerts. He'll only make fun of them.

He belongs on the alternative music scene. Besides, that's the kind of music his band plays, and they make fun of rock all the time. I've seen them numerous times, and I like their stuff. I am both an alternative and rock fan. I enjoy all kinds of music. It's a shame Melin can't do the same, but I think it's about time he gave it a shot.

This letter is in regards to Matt Vajnar, James Hare and any other male on the antichoice/pro-life side of the abortion issue. What business is it of yours, anyway?

Have you, or will you ever know what it's like to be pregnant, much less not want to be? Will you ever need to make a choice like this? I know I will never be pregnant, but if I were, I would want as many choices and as much information as possible. Vajnar, when you go so far as to say the Supreme Court should be reduced to a "bothersome, but harmless institution" - that is the same court we call the highest law in the land, isn't it? There should be some bells going off in your head by now, Vajnar. If not, maybe this closing will be lost on you.

It is amazing to see the issue of abortion so predominant in today's political and social Vajnar, abortion is, at the very least, an intensely personal issue. Most "girls," believe it or not, have the mental capacity to not only comprehend, but also deal with pregnancy sponsibly.

It must be hard for you, Vajnar, to think of all those abortions who could have grown up to be the next Einstein, Edison or Bush. But what about the "girls" whose lives were spent rearing famous, respectable men; who instead could have become the next Aerhart, Curie, Friedman or Dickenson.

What about them, Vajnar?

Holy frijoles! It's Jalapeno Fest

Event honors longest pepper pilgrimage

DAVID PRITCHARD

Collegian Reporter

Now that Miss USA and K-State's Rodeo Queen have been crowned, it's time to crown the king and queen of the 1991 Jalapeno Fest.

The Jalapeno Fest was founded by four students who came up with the idea three years ago while eating nachos and watching the NCAA basketball championship at Kite's Bar & Grille.

"They had an all-you-can-eatspecial on nachos, and we noticed that the more jalapenos we ate, the more beer we drank," said Jim Roth, senior in political science and a Jalapeno Fest co-founder. "So we thought, 'Hey, this would be a great way to get people to drink a lot of

The event now lasts three days and is complete with a pep rally Friday night, a golf tournament Saturday morning and food, games and a talent show Saturday afternoon. And, to top it all off, a king and queen will be chosen after a jalapeno pepper-eating contest Saturday.

Last year's king ate 36 jalapenos and the queen ate 22, Roth said.

"Everyone must eat at least one jalapeno," said another founder, Matt Huber, senior in marketing. "Most people usually don't eat more than

Attendance at the fest has grown since its first year, Huber said. "The first year we probably had 30 people show up and last year about 80," he said. "This year we already have about 135 prepaid reservations, and we will probably see between 180 and 200 people for the evening festivities," he said.

Many of the guests are coming from out of state, so the pep rally is an opportunity for everyone to get together and meet, he said. Prizes will be awarded to people who travel the farthest distances to attend the event, Roth said. "Right now we already have one friend who's coming from New Mexico," he said. "I think he'll probably win that. "We also rented the whole golf course this year," he said. year we just kind of showed up with about 40 people, and the manager was running around trying to make sure everyone had paid. So he gave us his number and told us we could rent it this year."

The four do all of the preparation and cooking themselves serving what they call an "International Buffet Style Feast," Huber said.

"We can't tell what it is, because it's top secret and it would spoil it for the guests," Roth said.

The event concludes on Sunday with a "cinematic overview" of the weekend, Roth said. The weekend will be captured on video tape and viewed by the guests.

The pep rally, golf tournament and lunch buffet are invitational events and cost $12 for all three, he said. The evening festivities are open to anyone and cost $3 per person.

City library offers diverse services

PAULA BERGLUND Collegian Reporter

If K-State students take advantage of the many services offered by the Manhattan Public Library, they will find it offers more than just a quiet place to study.

Rosie Pettle, administrative assistant at the Manhattan Public Library, said the library is used frequently by students. Anyone with a picture ID and proof of home address can get a library card.

The library offers many services in addition to lending books, she said.

Videos can be rented at the library, she said. The collection contains many Academy Award winning films, children's films and more.

The library also has many community service programs. Currently, it is offering VITA, a volunteer income tax program that offers assistance to the community and has all tax forms available.

Another service unique to the library is commmunity information, which allows staff to answer questions about the Manhattan

The library is the resource for all towns in the north-central area of Kansas. A book van travels to towns that don't have libraries.

Talking books for the blind or physically, handicapped people are available, and soon, the library will be adding recorded books to its tape collection and a compact disk collection.

If a student apartment needs to be decorated, art prints from the library's collection can be checked out. Prints can be checked out for a month at a time.

Space is available for art displays. The library hopes to open this space for the public in the future when there are more people available to staff the displays.

Although not considered a research library, it does have more materials than most middle-sized libraries. The library has limited study space, however, and doesn't have study corrals. It has all periodicals listed in the Reader's Guide, but not specialized journals, she said.

"We try to provide a user friendly environment. We are smaller and more intimate," she said. "Students feel safe here."

Spring once again makes fishers of men

SCOTT FOWLER

Collegian Reporter

It's that time of year again to pull out the tackle box and fishing pole and head to the lake to pull in some

Pat Spain, Tuttle Creek Park office assistant, said the fish are biting and people are catching channel cat, crappie and walleye.

Larry Leupold, manager of the River Rat Bait Shop, said fishing is generally good.

"If a person is intent on fishing, he will catch a bunch of fish anytime he wants to go," he said.

Leupold said crappie are in the cove areas in about 18 feet of water. He said a boat would be needed to catch them, but within a week crappie can be caught from the shore as they come into shallower water to lay their eggs.

People have been catching channel cat in the river and the flats at the end of the lake, Leupold said. The channel cat caught in these areas range from 2 to 20 pounds, he said.

In the tube outlet directly behind the dam, channel cat, crappie and walleye are being caught, Leupold said. The channel cat caught in this area have been ranging from 1 to 8 pounds, he said.

White bass and walleye are in the Rocky Ford area about a half mile below the tube outlet, he said. For bait, Leupold said chadsides and guts for channel cat, a minnow and a jig for crappie, and a jig and a worm for walleye, work best.

Bob Muto, owner of Bottgers Marine, said a good place to catch channel catfish is north of Randolph bridge at Tuttle Creek Reservoir. These channel cat caught are averaging from 1 to 6 pounds, he said. Muto said Girl Scout Cove and Fancy Creek are good spots to fish for crappie. He said the cove is located on the west side of the lake, and the creek at the north end on the west

Some large mouth bass are being caught in shallow water with minnows or jigs, he said.

"If the water clarity remains the same, it will be an excellent year for crappie and white bass," Muto said. The white bass can be caught with spinners, he said. People fishing from boats should be in a boat a minimum of 14 feet, and it should have at least a fourhorsepower engine, Muto said.

He said a fish finder for those fishing from a boat can help locate fish and indicate the depth of the water.

Spain said fishing permits cost $10.50 and can be purchased at the state park office located at 5020B Tuttle Creek Blvd. A 24-hour permit can be purchased for $3.50, she said.

Who's got J.R.?

The response to that question won't be known until Wednesday, but K-State basketball fans might be pleasantly surprised by the answer come signing day.

That's because J.R. Rider, a 6-foot-5 guard who signed with the Wildcats out of high school two years ago but didn't qualify academically, is said to be leaning toward bypassing a scholarship offer from UNLV to attend K-State.

Two separate sources close to the K-State program said Thursday that Rider's decision will "open some eyes" in the Midwest.

Rider, who spent a season at Allen County Community College before transferring to Antelope Valley (Calif.) Community College, averaged 30 points a game at Antelope last season.

When he left Allen, he said he'd never set foot in the Sunflower State again, and most believed him. UNLV was on Rider's mind even when he was at Allen, and the Runnin' Rebels won a national title in 1989-90 while K-State had a coaching change at season's end.

But that coaching change from Lon Kruger to Dana Altman - may be a big reason Rider might just be wearing purple and white next year and playing in Bramlage Coliseum rather than wearing red, black, and white and running the floor at the Thomas and Mack Center.

Altman, as K-State's top recruiter at the time of Rider's initial signing, was a big reason for that decision. He's probably playing a big role in this one, too.

Rider's academic troubles have been well documented, and Altman and former Allen County coach Neal Crane were credited for helping him "straighten up and fly

KU gets rumor mill going

Scott Paske

It was great to see a Big Eight Conference team playing for a national championship again Monday in Indianapolis.

K-State fans are always put in a peculiar position when they lend their allegiance to Kansas for a night. Many didn't, and that's fine. But when you think about Mr. Mouth, Oklahoma's Billy Tubbs, screaming the league's praises while blasting the Big East in the same breath, it had to make you feel a little proud.

It also had to scare you to death.

The Jayhawks may have lost on the the U.S. Army doesn't have scholarscoreboard to Duke, but think about the game's influence on KU recruiting.

Let's hope Wildcat coach Dana Altman took a lot of sales classes when he was working on his business degree at Eastern New Mexico. The in-state competition is tough.

Wednesday is national signing day for high school and junior college players. Altman and his staff are currently on the road visiting recruits. Rumors are flying. Somebody heard this, somebody has narrowed their choices to Alabama, Arkansas and K-State, somebody...

Recruiting is a year-long game played off the court. The only entity that does it better than college athletics is the military, and that's because ship limitations.

You can tell signing day is approaching because fans start asking questions. The media start asking questions. Everybody asks questions.

In essence, it's pointless, because NCAA officials say a coach cannot comment on recruits until he has signed them.

The concern is merited, however, because K-State fans just want to see Altman hit paydirt on hump day.

Because of the Jayhawks' success of the recent season, it seems the concern for K-State recruiting is centered on panic instead of curiosity. The 'Hawks have turned up the heat by overcoming NCAA probation with 57 wins the past two seasons.

Hazim gets District V nod for play in '90-'91

BILL LANG

K-State senior Nadira Hazim was honored as one of the top 45 players in the nation last weekend as she was named to the Kodak All-District V team and selected as a Kodak honorable mention All-American.

Each of the nine Women's Basketball Coaches Association districts selected a five-member squad, with that pool of players earning honorable mention All-America honors and qualifying for the 10-member Kodak All-America Team, which was announced last weekend at the Final Four in New Orleans, La.

Joining Hazim on the District V team were Oklahoma State's Liz Brown, Nebraska's Karen Jennings, Drake's Jan Jensen and Southern Illinois' Amy Rakers. District V is made up of teams from Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Oklahoma.

"Anytime you have a player who is recognized by the opposing coaches in your district as one of the top five players, it's a great honor," said K-State coach Susan Yow. "Our staff has thought all along that Nadira is the best off-guard in the Big Eight Conference, and she had the kind of season that deserves this recognition."

Hazim, a 5-7 guard from Topeka West High School, averaged 18.7 points and 5.7 rebounds per game this season to lead K-State to a 16-11 record.

Hazim was modest about receiving the award.

'Some people had told me I won it," she said. "It's a nice way to end up the season. It makes all the work worth it, and it's really nice to be named among those players."

During Big Eight regular-season play, Hazim finished second in the conference with 21.1 points per game and led the league in free throw percentage at 86.4 percent. She also

The men's and women's track teams will be headed south this weekend to compete in the first leg of midwest track and field's outdoor triple crown.

The Texas Relays in Austin will include 100 collegiate track and field programs. K-State will be among them, with 35 athletes competing for the Wildcats.

The three triple crown meets the Texas, Kansas (April 19-20) and Drake (April 26-27) Relays — boast tough competition and are considered good gauges of national competition.

"The Texas Relays are a big meet for us," said Coach John Capriotti. "There will be great competition in all the events.

This competition should come from several nationally strong programs. Among them will be Southwest Conference powers Arkansas, Texas and Baylor, Capriotti said.

Goals for the teams include capitalizing on the competition found early in the season and setting sights on national qualifying marks, he said. "This is the first big meet of the ready to compete," Capriotti said. "We hope to qualify all our relay teams for the finals and see some people approach the national qualifying standards in the individual events."

Both the men's and women's 4x100-meter relay teams and the men's 4x400-meter relay team have turned in impressive times for this early point of the season, he said. Individuals Capriotti expects to do well in the meet are javelin thrower Jon Rorabaugh and All-American Angie Miller in the throwing events, sprinter Thomas Randolph in the 100-meter dash and All-American Connie Teaberry and R.D. Cogswell in the high jump.

Rorabaugh and Miller both surpassed provisional qualifying marks in their respective events last weekend at the KSU Invitational.

Rorabaugh, a junior transfer from Barton County Community College, provisionally qualified and set a new school record with a throw of

Tennis team to battle Buffs

Netters look for 2nd straight Big 8 victory

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

Hoping to right itself after a 3-15 start, the tennis team follows up Tuesday's sweep of Missouri at home against Colorado Saturday.

After struggling through meetings with nationally ranked opponents throughout the spring, the Wildcats returned to Manhattan looking to the Big Eight season for some relief. After losing to Kansas in the conference opener, the squad took all nine matches from Missouri for its first win in nearly a month. After a 12-8 start, Colorado comes to Manhattan for its first conference matchup. Although they reeled off a string of six straight victories earlier this spring, the Buffaloes have been slowed by injuries and may be forced to juggle their lineup for the weekend dual.

The top three singles performers for Colorado have missed action due to injuries and could be limited Saturday.

Wendi Kaplan, the Buffaloes top player, has missed several matches while putting together a 6-5 record at No. 1 singles. Erika Stenstrom, slowed by stress fractures to both feet, has still been able to compile a 6-3 record at No. 2 singles and a 12-5 mark overall, but is listed as questionable for Saturday. In the No. 3 spot, Renee Marshall has fought back from injuries to a 4-5 mark.

CU's Jennifer Walker has played the majority of her matches in the No. 6 spot while recovering from an injury. Walker has compiled a 14-5 record in spite of the injury and will probably move up to the No. 4 position when she is healthy.

While the Buffaloes' performance has been hampered by the rash of injuries, Wildcat coach Steve Bietau hasn't chalked up a victory due to

"Colorado is one of the most improved teams in the conference," said Bietau, who coached the Wildcats to a 7-2 win over CU last season. They are not great players, but they have a lot of good players."

The Buffaloes tied for fifth in the conference last season with a 3-4 mark and finished at 18-9 overall. CU enters the Big Eight season coming off a California swing over spring break.

The squad defeated Long Beach State and Northridge State on the trip, but fell to Loyola Marymount, Cal-State Fullerton, and Cal-Irvine.

The Wildcats got a much-needed lift Tuesday in defeating Missouri. No K-State player lost more than three games in a set on the day. A win on Saturday would give the team its first back-to-back wins of the year.

"We need to play the kind of tennis we are capable of," Bietau said in regard to the meeting with CU. "We need to continue to expect more from ourselves and to make the right decisions."

Wildcats to face Mizzou

DAN WICKER

Sports Reporter

After disposing of Northern Iowa in a devastating fashion, the Wildcat baseball team will head back into conference play this weekend.

K-State will travel to Columbia, Mo., for a four-game series with the No. 25-ranked Tigers, who own a record of 17-4 overall and 3-1 in the Big Eight. Missouri took three of four games from Iowa State last

The Wildcats destroyed Northern Iowa 18-2 Tuesday, but will definitely have their hands full with Missouri, which is no slouch, according to K-State coach Mike Clark.

"It is going to be an important series in the fact that we need to start winning some Big Eight games," Clark said. "(Missouri) has a real good ballclub ranked in the top 25 in the nation. It is going to be a great challenge for us."

In its last Big Eight appearance, K-State fell to 3-5 in conference play. Oklahoma captured three of the four games in the series, which helped boost them to 12th in the most recent Associated Press Top 25 poll. Before that, K-State had split with Kansas.

Clark cited the team's lack of being able to put together a full series of good play to their sub-.500 Big Eight

"We haven't put together a good series yet this year, and it is about time for us to do something like that," Clark said.

And put together a good series is exactly what the Wildcats will have to do if they expect to capture the series with Missouri and challenge for one of the four spots in the postseason tournament.

Missouri has one of the best pitching staffs in the Big Eight, which has compiled a 3.03 ERA in 21 games. Clark said he believes the team is going to have to have an inning or two to score runs because the Missouri pitching staff will keep the score low. "Missouri has a tremendous pitching staff, and we are going to have to play very well at their place. In the Oklahoma series, we really didn't bunch our hits very well. Everybody looks at the fly ball Brian (Culp) dropped, but we lined into six infield outs," Clark said. "We could have very easily scored 12 runs that game. It seemed as though we hit the ball at them in key situations. We are hoping we can put some hits together and score some runs this weekend."

Another key factor, Clark said, will be the K-State pitching staff. He said K-State pitchers will have to control the Missouri offense.

"The whole series is going to come down to our pitching. We are going to have to pitch the ball, because their pitching is so strong," Clark said. "I don't envision a lot of high-scoring games for our standpoint. We have got to keep the run total down. If we do that, then we will have a good chance.'

As far as the play looking upward in the Big Eight, Clark said he saw huge strides in the performance of K-State in the Northern Iowa slaughter that could become a turning point for the 'Cats.

"I saw things Tuesday I haven't seen all year, as far as maybe swinging the bat at a bad pitch and rebounding for a quality at bat. The pitchers were throwing strikes and the defensive players were making the plays on a very rough field, Clark said. "I thought for the first time, we played relaxed. I think the kids may ■ See BASEBALL, Page 12

Sue Medley's blend of country and rock has made her both a rock and a pop star in her homeland of

Her music is more appealing to rock 'n' roll fans, because rock seems to allow for more diversity. The music is not truly country, but it leans heavily in that direction with slide guitars, twangy rhythms and Medley's own Canadian version of the country vocalist's yodel.

Medley's voice has a deep tone, which doesn't really seem to match her photographs. She sounds smooth, powerful, older than she looks and intentionally country. It is an easy sound to listen to and enjoyable.

Medley wrote all the songs on her latest self-titled album except a Bad Company cover, "Oh, Atlanta." Medley's talent as a songwriter is obvious.

The first song on the album, "Dangerous Times," was a complete pop and rock success in Canada and seems to carry the charm of pop music.

The album isn't an album of hits, however. The music is not much more than comfortable with some classic rock, new-album rock and country western influences. Songs jump from blatantly western trucking tunes to the modified folk of NAR.

The lyrics on the album are not poetic, except for their sounds. "Start It Over" has great rhythm owing to the lyrics which repeat, "She don't know the difference/Between light and dark/She's watching the clock/ Keeping time with her heart."

The rhyme here is less obvious than in the song, "Love Thing," which uses 'awhile' and 'while' as a Medley owes the grammar and style of these lyrics to her southern country influence, just like another Canadian band, the Cowboy Junkies.

Reviewer says ...

"Love Thing," seems to be a spinoff of Elvis' style and a sort of copy of "Wild Thing." This is not to say Medley isn't an artist in her own right. She exhibits an aggressive and new talent, she just allows her influences to show.

Medley's music is pop, rock, country and more because of the blend of these varying styles. She is easy to listen to, but nothing exciting ever happens on the album. She may be a credit to Canada, but to overstimulated and desensitized North America, Medley doesn't represent the birth of a major star.

Award-winning professor speaks on effects of railroad reforms upon Kansas economy

The deregulation of railroads has made it easier for major railroads to abandon shortlines in rural Kansas.

Mike Babcock, professor of economics and a three-time winner of the Transportation Research Forum Award, spoke of the effects of the 1980 Staggers Rail Act Thursday in the K-State Union.

The act increased rail rate flexibility and authorized the confidentiality of rail/shipper contracts. More importantly, the act restricted discussion of single-line rates in rate bureaus and accelerated abandonment and merger decisions, he

K-Staters to participate in Paris Prize design competition

CINDY BRIGGS

Collegian Reporter

Two K-Staters in the College of Architecture will be back to the drawing board as they participate in the second stage of the Lloyd Warren Fellowship Competition April 27-28 in New York City.

Lisa Nelson, fifth-year student in architecture, and Michael Morris, assistant professor in architecture, were two of six students across the nation who will compete in the weekend charette.

Also known as the Paris Prize competition, the Lloyd Warren Fellowship awards the top five individuals the chance to travel anywhere in the world and study architecture, said Wendy Ornelas, assistant professor of architecture and recipient of the award three years ago. Ornelas said the top prize is $6000 to study abroad for six months.

The event is a timed competition in which the participants have exactly one weekend to come up with a design for the given problem. The problem is not known until the first day of the competition.

'We have no idea of what they are asking them to do in New York," Ornelas said. "It's kind of hard to prepare for, but at least everyone gets an equal footing.

Although Nelson said she's nervous about the upcoming event, she said she's glad she doesn't know what the problem will be.

"This way I don't have to feel bad when I don't have time to study ahead on it," she said.

The first stage of the competition was held in January and was offered through an intersession class at K-State. The students had exactly one week to design a gateway to the ideal city and then send it to New York where it was judged.

Dr. Joan Bassin, executive director of the National Institute for Architecture Education, said there were 137 entries in the first stage of the competition, and six were chosen to compete in the finals.

Nelson said she didn't find out she was selected until spring break when she found the message on her answering machine.

"It could have been any of the ten (enrolled in the class)," she said. "I just got lucky.

Nelson's winning design used a cliff dwelling as the ideal city. The idea behind her design came from the relationship between man and nature, with nature being the force that runs life. Nelson said coming up with the idea was tough because there was so little time. She said she had to get in the habit of thinking abstractly.

"You think of what the entrance means to you. Its kind of abstract, that's my hardest part," she said. "You have to get the theories behind what it feels. Architecture deals with emotion more than people realize.

Ornelas, who instructed the class along with Bob Condia, associate professor of architecture, said K-State students had the advantage of taking the intersession class, whereas students from other schools had to do it on their own.

"They did have an advantage because they spent one entire week not thinking of anything else but this competition," she said.

Ornelas said the class spent the first day talking about the ideal city as well as practiced exercises in presentation.

"We had a good chance of winning something because each one of ours had a totally different idea," she said. "Some schools use the same presentation style, and you can tell what school a certain group comes from."

The Paris Prize Competition was founded in 1903 by Lloyd Warren, a prominent architect in New York. Ornelas said it was started when the study of architecture in the United States was just beginning.

At the time, the Ecole de Beaux Arts was an accomplished art school in Paris, and in the United States it was felt there was a need for a study of classic architecture. The award winning students were sent to the Paris school to study until it closed in

The Fine Art of Flight

K-State Flying Club gives students opportunity to earn pilot's license

Some people are not content with six feet off the ground.

Members of the K-State Flying Club choose a perspective from an airplane, making rivers and roads look like slithering snakes, and lakes like small puddles.

"It's just fun to be up there in the air on beautiful, sunny days," said Judy Marshall, president of the club. "I don't use it for a faster means of transportation as some members do, so if the day isn't beautiful, I don't

Marshall has been the president of the 72-member club since the spring of 1990 and has been a member for about four years. In that time, she has amassed over 900 hours of flight time, she said.

The beginning was the worst part, gun if I didn't get it in the air," Mar-malities such as taking a physical and tween a runway and a taxiway, then was also a pilot.

The first part of the pilot training involves a series of touch and gos, done at Spicer Airfield. In these exercises the pilot practices landing the Cessna 152, a two-seat airplane, by barely leaving the ground, then touching back down. This is done repeatedly in a square circuit around Spicer Airfield.

"Taking off is nothing," Marshall said. "Landing is the hard part."

Marshall, however, was happy at first to do only the touch and gos. Leaving the security of the airport and the ground made her nervous, she said.

"My husband and the instructor said they would threaten me with a

This isn't true for all members, said Sam Knipp, vice president of the "Absolutely not," Knipp said when asked if he was scared when he first took to the air over four years ago. "I had made the decision to learn how to fly before I got into the airplane. If you don't, you might as well not bother doing it.' Teaching people to fly is the purpose of the club, he said. That is why the club was founded more than 25 years ago. The club caters to people who have ties with K-State, Marshall said. It doesn't matter whether a person is > a student, faculty member or spouse of either.

"If two people were wanting to join and one was from K-State and the other was a businessman, we would choose the person from K-State," Marshall said.

Wanting to fly, however, isn't enough. First, some for-put to rest. "It's not a thorough physical," Marshall said. "It would not take the place of a complete physical."

Marshall said fledgling pilots must have sound hearts and good vision. High blood pressure and medications currently being taken are checked as well. This is to ensure pilots won't be endangering themselves or others by going up with a condition that would impair their abilities.

Surprisingly, having poor vision will not hinder a person from becoming a pilot, Knipp said.

"We have pilots with glasses. If you have coke bottles for glasses, that may be a different story," he said. "Colorblindness is more of problem than poor eyesight."

This is due to the different colors of light a pilot must be able to recognize in order to be able to land and take flight, Knipp said. For instance, blue lights mean that portion of the airport is a taxiway. Yellow and red lights, on the other hand, stand for runways.

"If you can't tell the difference be-

The membership fee is $128, which buys stock in the nonprofit corporation. When a member leaves the club, $100 is returned because that is the fixed price of the stock. Other fees include $26 per hour of flight time and $15-17 per hour for an instructor, Knipp said

Once the fees are paid, the pilot starts in the Cessna 152, which cruises at a speed of 90 to 100 mph. The pilots usually fly at least two times a week, Knipp said.

Flying the 152 can prove to be frustrating at times, especially when flying into a stiff wind, Knipp said. Cases have been documented in which a slower airplanes, such as the 152, have actually flown backwards.

"I've come close to doing that," Knipp said. "I was flying over Topeka, or at least heading in that direction, but I was flying right into a strong headwind.

"I looked down and noticed cars were passing me on the highway. Finally, I turned it back around. I just wasn't making any progress."

Film teeters between clever, stupid

In the early 1980s, the TV program "SCTV" introduced a number of new comedians to the American viewing

John Candy, Martin Short, Andrea Martin and Eugene Levy made up a part of this "Saturday Night Live"-style programming, and they have since gone on to starring motion-picture roles.

Perhaps the best known characters to come from "SCTV," however, were created by Dave Thomas and Rick Moranis. The beer-guzzling, happily confused McKenzie brothers, Bob and Doug, appeared on the show several times and were soon immortalized on film.

Now you can see the adventures of Bob and Doug McKenzie, "Strange Brew," at the K-State Union. It's your chance to see this incredibly funny film as few others have - on a movie screen. Although response at the box office was fairly lukewarm when it opened, the cast members have become cult heroes.

An album and a single featuring fellow Canadian Geddy Lee from Rush, "Take off," proved to heighten their profile. Perhaps they are best known for their unorthodox version of "The Twelve Days of Christmas" ("and a beer in a pear tree"), heard every holiday season on radio stations across the country.

Thomas and Moranis co-wrote the screenplay and co-directed "Strange Brew." The numerous plot holes can be forgiven, because there is hardly a minute that isn't funny. In fact, some of the scenes even seem like set-ups for jokes. But none of this seems to matter as the two teeter the fine line between clever and stupid.

The movie begins with the McKenzie brothers being the hosts of their TV show "Great White North." Somehow, they've gotten the funds to make a movie, they explain, filmed in 3-B. "Three beers and it looks good, eh?" says Doug.

Bob sets up a screen and they roll "The Mutants of 2051 A.D.," an exprobably done with a Super-8 camera. In junior high, whenever I saw a friend of mine in the hall, our greeting would be the lines from this

"Fleshy-headed mutant, are you friendly?

"No way, eh," I would reply. "Radiation has made me an enemy of all mankind!'

It was easy to adopt the McKenzie brother lingo, and it was the source of endless frustration for my teachers. Then the videocassette came out, and one day while my parents were gone, I rented another VCR and copied it. "Strange Brew" was mine Since then, I must have watched it

Riley said the team received tremendous support from the professional chapter in Kansas City. The members gave the team pointers on improving the presentation both during the convention and earlier when the team attended the professional chapter's meeting.

The K-State team took first place in 1988 and 1983, second in 1986 and made it to the semi-finals in 1989 and 1990, Riley said.

The University of Missouri-Columbia took first place out of the 28-team field with a presentation on a spreadable fiber-enriched fruit spread, Long said.

The outstanding chapter competition is based on the activities a chapter does throughout the year, including the marketing team competition. The chapter finished third overall in

"K-State has always done well in a number of these kinds of competitions. It's expected," Riley said.

The chapter's activities this year included an agriculture interview clinic in January, the Agri-Business Careers Fair and the Cattlemen's Day brochure.

Members also coordinated advertising for the Kansas Junior Livestock Show and participated in a mentor program with the professional chapter in Kansas City.

MacFee was nominated by the chapter for the scholarship based mostly on her previous NAMA activities. Each of the 33 chapters nationwide can nominate one person.

The two-page resume MacFee submitted in February was judged by professional chapter members.

This is the only $1,000 Successful Farming-Ferguson Scholarship awarded at the convention. Two other $300 scholarships were also awarded, Riley said.

Debra English, human resource specialist for the Bureau of Prisons at the U.S. Penitentiary in Leavenworth, talked about the jobs available in the penitentiary.

She said the turnout has been excellent, and five interns are working at the penitentiary in Leavenworth.

"Many students are surprised about some of the job openings such as craft-type jobs and teaching positions," she said.

Mike Tolbert, senior in sociology, attended the event and said he is doing his internship in the personnel department at the penitentiary.

Tolbert said the internship allowed him to learn a lot about the penitentiary. He has worked with correction officers and taken several recruiting trips. He said he is writing an internship paper on his experiences at the facility

But Rider isn't the only juco star the Wildcats are rumored to be in the hunt for.

K-State, after the signing of 6-8 forward George Hill and 6-1 guard Brian Henson in the early period, has four scholarships to give.

And four of the top scorers in the Jayhawk Community Conference are said to have listed K-State among their top choices.

They are the following:

■ Trasel Rone, 6-6, swingman, Allen County. Rone averaged 25.5 points and 10 rebounds for Allen, and is said to have K-State atop his list after he had earlier considered Oklahoma and Arkansas.

■ Eric Coates, 6-6, swingman, Independence. Coates averaged 24.0 points and 10 rebounds for Independence, and St. John's may have an inside edge over K-State for his services, but the Wildcats aren't done

■ Andre Perry, 6-7, small forward, Coffeyville. Perry averaged 23.4 points and nine boards for Coffeyville, and has visited Arkansas and Alabama.

■ Gaylon Nickerson, 6-3, shooting guard, Butler. Averaged 20.2 points and six rebounds for Butler after playing as a freshman for Wichita State. Three additional schools join K-State on his list.

In the most recent recruiting roll call published by juco guru Rick Ball, 22 players are listed as being on the Wildcats' wish list.

■ CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6 Kansas coach Roy Williams didn't need a second-place finish in the NCAA Tournament to make his 1991 recruiting class a successful one. Williams inked five high school players in the early signing period, the most notable being Greg Ostertag, a 7-foot-1 center who was a top five pick in the Dallas metro area.

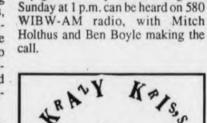

KU has one scholarship remaining, and the 'Hawks seem to know who they want. Williams reportedly spent Thursday in California courting Eric Pauley, a 6-foot-10 forward from Cypress Junior College.

While the Jayhawks' dirty work is all but over, K-State has four vacancies to fill. Prep standouts George Hill and Brian Henson joined the 'Cats in the early signing period, and it appears K-State is turning to the junior college ranks.

Who better to go after the two-year players than Altman, a former coach at Moberly (Mo.) Junior College?

The rumor mill is generating plenty of possibilities for the 'Cats, and each name is followed by impressive credentials. Remember, one of the reasons Altman was brought to K-State was his solid record as a recruiter. The names Richmond and Derouillere should serve as a reminder of that

Committee approves proposal for merger

CHRISSY VENDEL

Collegian Reporter

TOPEKA - After intense questioning during a special hearing Saturday, the Senate Ways and Means Committee approved the bill proposing the K-State/Kansas College of Technology merger.

The hearing was held to provide information for unanswered questions the committee members had about the benefits of the merger. Sue Peterson, assistant to President Wefald, said the hearing was Saturday so Kansas employers testifying that KCT gradutes are in demand could avoid scheduling conflicts.

Committee members heard testimony from an executive from Kansas Power and Light, a plant manager from Phillips Lighting, an officer of the Kansas National Guard and the executive director of the Kansas Board of Regents, Stanley Koplik.

After each testified, the senators asked probing questions to ascertain whether the merger would be good public policy.

Some senators expressed concerns that if approved, K-State and KCT would need more money in future years.

Koplik testified he didn't think that would be the case.

"I don't want to come back and ask for more money," he said.

Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, said he was surprised at the amount of controversy he heard. "I think we're running into 'me' problems," he said. "This wasn't offered to 'me,' this will slow 'me' down."

After the senators' questions were satisfactorily answered, a motion to approve the merger on the basis of validity was passed.

Then a motion to send the bill to the full Senate including allocations for K-State to keep $477,000 in faculty salaries, and $250,000 for equipment for KCT was approved. The bill is expected to be considered by the Senate early this week.

Both motions passed favorably with only Sen. Paul Feleciano, D-Wichita, abstaining.

Sen. Nancy Parrish, D-Topeka, warned that the committee was making no promises ■ See KCT, Page 12

It was the first time in more than five years that any Americans had taken a space walk. Ross and Sherwood Spring made that venture from the shuttle Atlantis on Dec. 1, 1985. The repair job made it possible to release the $617 million Gamma Ray Observatory into orbit at 6:37 p.m. EDT, 41/2 hours late, from Atlantis. The time of release was not critical to the mission, as is the case when a planetary probe is involved.

The observatory will record the high-energy radiations coming from some of the most violent processes in the universe for the next two years and perhaps longer. Gamma rays do not penetrate the atmosphere and cannot be detected on Earth.

Flight directors decided to take advantage of Ross and Apt's unexpected venture into the cargo bay and had them do some experiments that had been scheduled for a space walk on Monday.

Their time in open space was about 31/2 hours. They did not take their space suits off immediately after closing the cargo bay hatch, instead standing by inside an airlock to go outside again should anything go wrong with the observatory's release.

The space walkers plan to complete their tests in the cargo bay on Warm and sunny weather greeted an estimated 20,000 prospective K-State students and parents as they traveled to the many exhibits, activities and displays on campus April 6.

The K-State All-University Open House officially started at 9 a.m. and lasted until 4 p.m. Yet, many of displays and exhibits were being worked on as early as April 5, and many people were still touring the campus after 4 p.m. April 6.

One of the larger displays was a sand castle built by students from the College of Architecture and in landscape architecture who was in charge if the 10-person team building the castle, said sand had been dumped on the island in Seaton court April 5 and the team had been working on the sand castle at 7 p.m. with little interruption.

"We made it up as we went along; we have had to change some of the plans," Belcher said. "We have had a couple of hundred people out here all day and a lot of good compliments.'

Less than 20 feet away, a large crowd of people surrounded a 12-foot steel-frame structure.

Students from the architecture and design college were climbing up the structure and dropping off unique looking objects, which were designed to protect an egg from

The crowd cheered when the object fell without making a crunching or crashing noise.
Inside the K-State Union, on the top and bottom floors, there were many displays from the various colleges, departments, schools, clubs and organized living groups.

The Union was filled with prospective students, family members, small children and students sitting or standing by display booths and tables.

Representing the College of Human Ecology, Traci Horton, junior in hotel restaurant management, and Annette Green, junior in interior design, passed out red, yellow and purple helium balloons.

Debate team takes national championship

Team of McCollum, Filippi takes first by defeating UCLA

MARLA ROCKHOLD

K-State's debate squad did something only one other school has ever done. On Monday, April 1, the entire squad was named as the best in the nation, and it had a team win the national championship.

The team of Rich McCollum, senior in speech, and David Filippi, senior in speech, are the national champions. "They had an incredible tournament," said Susan Stanfield, director of debate and head coach. "McCollum and Filippi came out of preliminaries undefeated and were seated second for quarterfinals." In quarterfinals, she said they met up with K-State's team of K. J. Wall, Klein, sophomore in history. Because McCollum and Filippi are graduating seniors, Wall and Klein elected to not debate them and let them pass on.

In the finals, McCollum and Filippi defeated a team from the University of California at Los Angeles in a 90-minute debate in front of about 300 people, Stanfield said.

McCollum said they had some of the hardest judges in the finals, they had ever had.

They were very diverse and a hard panel to adapt to," McCollum

The team of Marty Horn, senior in speech, and Dan Molden, senior in speech, also came out of preliminaries undefeated. She said they were sophomore in speech, and Jason seeded first for quarterfinals, but in special education and Kathryn were defeated by a team from Southern Illinois University. Horn was named as the third-best > speaker in the tournament, Filippi sixth, McCollum ninth and Molden as 10th best. Four other K-State teams also made it into quarterfinals, which is the most a school has ever had, Stanfield said. Those teams are as follows: Jennifer Dunn, sophomore in speech, and Steve Harris, sophomore in business administration; Dave Klein, senior in history, and Shawn Riffel, freshman in political science; Jill Baisinger, sophomore in history, and Terri Richardson, freshman in prelaw, who were beaten by last year's champions; and Kim Haynes, junior

Anastasio, junior in business administration

"This squad had more depth than any other program in the country," Stanfield said.

"We had two phenomenally talented senior teams and junior, sophomore and freshman teams that placed at tournaments all year," she said. "Very few schools have so much talent all the way down."

Stanfield said the debate squad was as prepared as they had ever been. They had quit traveling to tournaments early to begin intense preparation.

'I've been associated with the team for five years, and I've never seen it more prepared," said Steve Collins, administrative assistant for

Mike Korcok, graduate assistant coach, said the team was definitely

"The only surprises were from K-State," Korcok said. "We ran arguments that surprised everyone on the first and last day.

Horn said the squad knew before they went they would have to be prepared.

"We also had to be adaptive,"
Horn said. "There are all styles of judging. They all have their own preference."

Stanfield said everyone on the squad made it possible for Filippi and McCollum to win. Everyone spent the whole day on Monday getting information ready for the final rounds. K-State was one of the few schools that did that.

Horn said he agreed.

'The biggest thing that helped was the way the squad worked," Horn said. "Even after each team dropped out, they kept working."

"I am really pleased and also over-whelmed," McCollum said. "I'm one of the few who gets to end their career with a win.'

The squad was emotional when they found out they had won, McCollum said. "I actually screamed, 'The Cats won.

He said clapping and cheering went on for 30 minutes to an hour. "It was euphoria," Stanfield said. Everyone was cheering, hugging and screaming. She said it was not only the hard work of the squad, but others who made the wins possible. The graduate coaches, Korcok, Tom DeGarlais, James AhYun and Eric Morris worked hard, she said.

but divisions created by the Communist election victory may presage a long period of turmoil and violence.

The joy of the first free vote since the 1920s evaporated after the polls closed on election day, March 31.

Jubilation greeted initial triumphs for the democratic opposition. Then it became clear that backward villages had rejected the unknown in favor of the familiar. The countryside, where two-thirds of 3.2 million people live, voted overwhelmingly Communist.

For Europe's poorest nation, it is the worst possible mess: Albania is governed by a party that does not control the cities and cannot, because it is Communist, count on Western investment to rescue a ruined economy.

Anger at alleged Communist vote fraud exploded into violence at Shkodra, a northern city, and security forces opened fire. Four people were killed and about 60 wounded.

Lou Farish said he's heard the snickers of people who don't take seriously talk of cow mutilations, crop circles and extraterrestrial kidnappings. And he insisted it's no joke: space aliens that visit the Soviet Union really do look different than those that visit the United States.

"I'm assuming the skeptics don't know anything about the subject or they don't want to face the implications of the subject. They don't want their world disturbed," Farish said Sunday in a telephone interview from the third Ozark UFO Conference.

"The implication of the subject ... is we're definitely not alone. I don't know if we're in danger. There's that possibility," said the 53-year-old part-time postal clerk who publishes a newsclipping

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Nancy Reagan is portrayed in a new biography as a vain, manipulative woman who was promiscuous while she was a Hollywood starlet and carried on a long love affair with Frank Sinatra.

The book, "Nancy Reagan: the Unauthorized Biography," due in book stores today, also maintains that Nancy Reagan pulled the strings in the White House while husband Ronald Reagan performed as her virtual puppet.

The best thing I could say about Mrs. Reagan is she was a good president," the book's author, Kitty Kelley, said in an interview Sunday.

WICHITA (AP) - Nancy Shoemaker, a 9-year-old whose disappearance and death last summer galvanized the community, has been laid to rest by her family and friends.

"There will be questions for a long time," the Rev. Michael O'Donnell said at the mid-morning burial service Saturday. "We can honestly say we cannot understand Nancy's death."

The child disappeared July 30. Her skeletal remains were found nearly seven months later in a Sumner County field. Authorities think she was strangled before her body was covered with leaves. At the service, Nancy's father, Wayne "Bo" Shoemaker, and stepmother Julie, sat before a large, framed photograph of Nancy. It was a picture now familiar to thousands throughout Wichita, reproduced on more than 100,000 fliers posted in shop windows

Four plainclothes detectives, one with a tape recorder visible in his vest pocket, stood at the rear. They conferred after the service, but would not comment on the investigation into Nancy's death.

Students compete in science contest

WICHITA (AP) - More than 1,000 high-school students brought bugs for the "Don't Bug Me" event, and eggs for the "Scrambler," along with other assorted items for the Kansas Science Olympiad.

Students competed in more than 20 events that tested their knowledge of astronomy, biology, chemistry, geology, math and physics. The contest was Saturday at Wichita State University. One event called "Scrambler," challenged students to design a vehicle that could carry a raw egg along the floor for 10 meters and stop before hitting a brick wall. Gerald Loper, associate dean of the Fairmount College of Liberal Arts and Sciences at Wichita State, said the competition was a great opportunity for the students and an example of what American schools should strive for. "It's a lot of hard work to prepare for this," Loper said.

Fire burned three-quarters of the 8,000-acre Konza Prairie Natural Research Area Friday.

Area firefighters battled the fire for 11 hours that, at its widest, spread from Interstate 70 on the south to Highway 177 on the east and from 12th Avenue on the northwest to McDowell Creek Road on the west.

Units from the Riley County Rural, Fort Riley and Geary County fire departments were involved in the effort.

A Geary County firefighter was injured when his truck rolled as he swerved to avoid a collision while he was exiting on to 1-70 in Geary County. The firefighter swerved because the brakes of the truck he was driving failed. He was treated at an area hospital and released.

Another firefighter was reported to have felt ill while battling the blaze. He was taken by private vehicle to an area hospital. No further information about his condition was available.

Increasing the difficulty of the effort for firefighters was the constant shifting of wind direction from the southeast to the southwest. The wind shifts at one point caused flames to leap 177.

The debate team became the national champions April 1, when it defeated UCLA in the National Cross Examination Debate Association tournament in Bellingham, Wash. En route to the victory, the squad totaled 179 points, breaking the record for the most points scored in the tourney.

K-State also captured individual honors, as Rich McCollum, junior in speech, and David Filippi, senior in speech, defeated a team from UCLA to become national champions.

"On behalf of the University, we are very proud of the debate team," Wefald said, who handed out national championship Tshirts and K-State mugs to the team. "We appreciate so much the hours of dedication and hard work you've put in.

"This is just another symbol of the academic excellence at K-State," Wefald added, "It dawned on me this past week about all the outstanding students we've produced the past five years. 5:30 p.m. — Camping party tries to leave, between fueling at an Amoco, purchasing franks and buns at Food-4-Less and then buying particular beverages at local specialty store. Present members areas follows: Orren Hatchet, Albert Candlemaker, Mike "Red" Trail, Lumpy Horowitz and Fred Spooge. Members not present: Fritz Mondale, Boog Powell and A. Horzschak.

Proposals - Meeting called to order: approved 5-0; That Lumpy Horowitz should leave his electrical appliances at home: approved 5-0, overruled by Lumpy, to whom the Lumina belongs.

5:45 p.m. — Red Trail discusses alternate travel plans for the expedition; calls everyone a pansy. Orren Hatchet threatens to give him what is called a "moonface" later in the evening. Hatchet also expresses hope that the party finds an alien baby or bigfoot, like in the Weekly World News headlines.

Proposals — To hike the 75 miles from Manhattan to Lake Perry: fails 1-4; To leave

Red behind: fails 1-3, 1 abstaining.

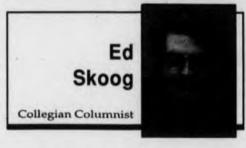

6:00 p.m. — Camping party's Lumina actually exits Manhattan, highway 24 to Lake Perry. Spooge reminds the members about what happened last time, and not to let it happen again. Sleepwalking is discussed, as is sleepfondling.

Proposals - Not to wake sleepwalkers: approved 4-1; Not to wake sleepfondlers: fails 1-4. Dissenting vote was Albert Candlemaker.

Saturday, April 6 He-man Day Two

6:35 p.m. — Meeting called to order. Pre-sent: Hatchet, Red Trail, Spooge and Candlemaker(sleepfondler). Hatchet updates committee on events since last night's emergency adjournment. No sign of Lumpy. Parked Lumina behind a tree, left spare keys under the tire. Spooge a poor driver. Lumpy had been driving, but pulled over at a 24-hour hardware store near Lake Perry Dam and hopped out. Fred Spooge, the only other he-man with a driver's license, was pressed into service and could no longer take minutes, so the meeting was adjourned. The remaining members of the party hiked in the dark until a heman campsite was found near the water. Breakfast is made and eaten. Spooge mentions that maybe they should go look for Lumpy, but as usual, no one listens.

Proposals - Meeting called to order: approved 4-0; Prohibition on whistling 'Dueling Banjos': approved 3-1; To have Poptarts, beer and Pork 'n' Beans for breakfast: approved 3-1; To have cakes on the griddle when the sun comes up: fails 1-3; Prohibition on referring to John Denver songs for he-man camping wisdom: approved 3-1.

10 a.m. - Candlemaker says he hopes the party is interrupted by alien landing, that it would be "cool." Red has swam the lake once. Spooge and Hatchet check for signs of sleepfondling, discover none, but count 32 ticks between them. Candlemaker wants to go back to the Lumina because someone forgot to bring down certain toiletries, and he claims to have no desire to use leaves. He is told to "just hold it" until the scheduled hike, which may lead in the general direction of the Lumina. Candlemaker groans and is called a pansy by Red, who immediately jumps into the frigid lake for another few laps.

Proposals — To attempt to communicate with alien life forms, should they be found: approved 3-1; To start tick farm modeled on ant farms and the Armana colonies: approved 2-1, 1 disgusted; Hike set for noon: approved 3-1; Hike set right damn now: fails 1-3.

(These are the only surviving legible minutes. From police files and the scratches on a pad of paper found near the campsite, it appears this is what happened:

The hike went without difficulties, though Candlemaker split from the group and was the first to arrive at the Lumina. Fred Spooge's right hand was mangled by an unidentified thorn bush and tried to write with his left hand, which only had three fingers. It is unknown what Hatchet, Trail and Spooge did between the hike and roughly 9 that night, although there were 57 undescribed votes, mostly failures. This can be deduced from Spooge's minute writing attempt.

Apparently, Spooge's manual dexterity in his left hand was uncapable of composing letters, but could manage numerals more or less capably. Also, many empty bottles of Southern Comfort, Old Crow and Drummond Brothers were discovered at the campsite. The unfortunate campers may have been drunk at the time of the misunderstanding.)

From the police file the following day:

"Officers were called to the scene at about midnight, after reports of screaming and strange lights in the Sluff Creek area of Lake Perry. When they arrived minutes later, they found four bodies clustered around the side of a minivan," (the last part crossed out), "around the side of a 1991 Lumina, and a Mr. Candlemaker in the driver's seat, delerious and raving about aliens traveling through extension cords. All five persons had been electrocuted by an improperly wired TV set in the back seat of the vehicle. Sgt. Preston believes the campers saw the breaklights of the vehicle and the black-and-white television's light and believed it was an invasion.

"Frankly, Sgt. Preston thought the same thing as officers approached the vehicle. Victims may have attempted to communicate with the 'aliens' by touching the TV set, which was wired so badly that even a glancing touch would have fried an Eskimo in a second. The television, the faulty wiring system and a large backpack had been purchased by the late Mr. Clarence Horowitz at a 24-hour hardware store in Perry the previous evening...

"Four dead. One weird. Apparent cause: he-man camping.

he legend of the He-Man Camping Expedition of April 1991 will certainly survive long in the legends around Lake Perry. Mourn our he-

Debate team wins it all

Kansas was focused on the cinderella exploits of the Jayhawk basketball team, another Kansas team was in the process of winning another prestigious national title.

Unfortunately, the Jayhawks were defeated (actually blown out) in Indianapolis, but the K-State debate team won the 1990-91 national title by defeating the University of California, Los Angeles.

The K-State debate team is used to being at or near the top of the pack, placing second in 1990, third in 1989 and fifth in 1988.

The debate team also compiled 179 tournament points, which broke the record for the most total points scored. Our team, the K-State debate team, made this wonderful accomplishment.

The debate team also has aggressively competed against some of the top public and private universities in the nation, and they still finished as the number one debate team in America.

Heck, with six Rhodes scholars, nine Trumans, two Mar-

Last week, while the state of shalls, nine Fulbrights, three Mellons and a top-ranked debate team, K-State is one of the top public universities in the nation.

> K-State students can adequately justify this statement to anyone.

K-State students should commend and congratulate the team of Rich McCollum and David Filippi, which defeated UCLA in the final round, and the other members of the debate team, who also placed members in the top 10 for individual

We must also note the topnotch coaching performance of debate coach Susan Stanfield and the outstanding support from the administration.

Hopefully, the academic excellence demonstrated by the debate team and many other K-State students will not be ignored by the state legislators as they contemplate cutting funding again this year.

The students of K-State and the citizens of Kansas should be proud of their accompishments, and we can be confident we will be favorites to win again next year.

Responsibility key

Editor,

I am writing in response to Brian McCal-

You claim that the abortion issue isn't Matt Vajnar's or Janmes Hare's business? What makes you think it's yours?

You also claim that most "girls" deal with pregnancy responsibly. Do you really think

The responsibility begins with sexual intercourse. Women and men both know the consequences. If you're not ready to deal with the outcomes, whatever they may be, then think before you have sex. That's where
